INTRODUCTION

In publishing this History and Genealogy of the Greenlee Family we have aimed to make it as complete and at the same time as simple as possible, embracing the desirable features of numerous other works of this kind hitherto published.

Several thousand descendants of the Greenlee Family were furnished with blanks to be filled out with data concerning their families, but many of them failed to respond to our communications.

Whenever it has been possible we have copied wills, records, etc., directly from the originals. Where members or descendants of a family have given different dates, preference has been given to those which seemed most plausible, according to existing circumstances. In many cases where there were no means of determining which information was correct, the various dates have been given. When Bible records have differed from town records, the latter have been accepted as correct.

The work of collecting information regarding different members of the Greenlee Family has unfortunately not been made easier by previous genealogies and we have been obliged to rely on the co-operation of the members for a large portion of the information obtained. We have to thank the descendants generally for their kindness and readiness to assist us in many ways.

Ezekiel Greenlee Greenlee,
Elmer Lewis Greenlee.

EXPLANATORY

Each Greenlee descendant has been traced back as far as possible with the data we have been able to obtain, and will be found under the heading of the branch to which he belongs. Those whom we have identified as descendants of the early Greenlee immigrants to America have been given individual numbers. Those whom we have been unable to connect with any of these branches have been placed in the UNIDENTIFIED under Scotch, Irish, English and Unclassified. In the unidentified portion only those who married and had families have been given individual numbers.

The ancestral line (in bracket) follows the name in black faced capitals.

The mark > indicates that additional data will be found in the next generation.

The superior figure following a name indicates the generation. For example: No. 197. Ralph Stebbins Greenlee[4] indicates that he is in the fourth generation from Michael of Kent County, Delaware.

THE GREENLEE FAMILY

Of an ancient Family "Borough Anglo Baron," named Greenlee, called in the Midland Counties of England, "The Greenlees," from the researches of John Thorpe, Herald of Dunkerton House, Warwickshire, we learn that two Knights of this family, "Harold and Adam Greenlee" of the Green Chase, Northumberland, for valorous gallantry in the Scottish Campaign against the Danes, were gifted by King Alfred to a Tenement in the County of Warwick, called Bulmer Chase, now called Bulmer Heath, where this branch lived in opulence and high respect, up to the time of Queen Elizabeth, when, through Lord Wentworth, Minister to that Royal Lady, they were granted estates near the City of Limerick, Ireland, thereby to establish an Armory and Pedigrees for wood crew and Colonia Canons. There this branch lived in high repute up to the time King James was with William, Prince of Orange, when their Hall and Works being seized and burned, they were invited by the protection of the Marquis of Drogheda. But thereafter, being greatly reduced in fortune, James Greenlee and family embarked at the port of Waterford, Ireland, with intention to settle within a township called "Mount Pennsylvania," but must have been diverted from that province to the neighborhood of a place called "Mathews Fort, Maryland" as letters bearing that Post Stamp Mark were directed thence to Sir John Lanier, of Fairhelle, Ireland, concerning the purchase of estate for said Lanier's family, by James Greenlee; also letters from many Post Stamps to Lord Lambton, of Lambton Castle, Durham County, England (all friends of the Greenlee family), which letters were preserved in the archives of Aston Cote Manor Hall, Warwickshire, where they were found in the year 1600 by John Thorpe, Farmer, of Guildhouse Manor, said County, together with a manuscript history of the Greenlee family, a duplicate indentured copy of which was found in 1868, in the British Consul General's office, Baltimore, and forwarded by Anthony Barclay, of the British Consulate, Barclay St., New York, to James West, Lord of the Manor, of Aston on Ess, Warwickshire. Which James West was related, on the maternal side, to the Irish Friends of the Warwick County Greenlees, supposed to be settled in the neighborhood of a place called Mathews Royalty of Maryland, the letters having been passed there.

The Irish branch of the Greenlee family, as well as the Greenlees of Blackhearth, Warwickshire, were retained by ancestors of Henry the 8th, for distinguished gallantry, to have their Armorial bearings topped by a green mound and plant of Oak, such for glorious memorial to the Knight of the Royal Friends, "Gwilliam Greenlee," who, while leading a storming party to the Seventh at Harfleur, raising his Standard Bearer killed and the Standard lost, plucked up a young oak plant, called upon his troops to follow a Greenlee and that plant to victory. Whereon his soldiers charged forward to the Seventh which was gallantly captured, but within the hamlet successfully found their brave commander dying of his wounds, with his last words begging his men to bury him on the Fortune Ground with the sprig of Oak, which had served for their standard to be planted over his grave, which command the soldiers piously obeyed. On the return of King Henry at the close of the campaign, his Majesty seeing the young oak flourishing over the green mound, where lay the valorous Greenlee, ordered the mound to be carefully tended and fenced, and a sick built thereon, bearing the name Greenlee, "plus heure, &c., plus heure" and the Latin motto, "Virtus et fidelis." The King also, as a further mark of gracious appreciation of his gallant Captain's service, on his return to London, ordered the Royal Silver-smith to furnish the Greenlee family with a full service of silver plate, each piece with the family Escutcheon, bearing Armorial Quarterings: One mound capped by Sprig of Oak, heraldic sign of endurance and stability; Gemmpler bars on the shield, sign of rising superior to misfortune; the crescent, above Star, sign of purity in the magistracy; and the square diamond, sign of family rectitude. Genealogists, antiquaries and researchers, for a thousand years of close British Midland County Records, trace the most notable traits of the Greenlee family.

GREENLY

[From Burke's Commoners of Great Britain and Ireland. [1836] p. 292.]

THE GREENLYS have been resident at Tilery and at Mawley in the adjoining parish of Stanton on Arrow for many centuries, their names occurring in deeds and parchments as far back as the reign of Edward IV. (1461.)

JOHN GREENLEYE of Mowldly had the Manor of Woodhalfhill in Stanton on Arrow, granted to him by Margaret Stokes, in 1575. He died 21st April, 1593 leaving issue also, by his wife Anne, a son and successor.

EDWARD GREENLEYE, Esq., of Tyrley, who married in 1610 Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Norton, Esq., of Shropshire, and had issue.

Andrew, his heir.

John, who died in 1637.

Dorothea, married in 1646 to George Dodd, Esq.

Edward Greenleye died 20th June, 1646, and was succeeded by his eldest son.

ANDREW GREENOLLE, Esq., of Tyning, born in 1631, who espoused first Alice ———, and had issue:

John, his heir.

Andrew, who died unmarried in 1664.

Elizabeth.

Abigail.

Mr. Greenolle married secondly in 1666, Margaret daughter of Thomas Dawes, gent. of Wigmore in the county of Hereford, by whom he had 3 daughters:

Margaret married to Mr. Harris of Abergavenny.

Dorothea who died unmarried.

He was succeeded by his son

JOHN GREENOLLE, Esq., of Tyning. This gentleman married first in 1672, Dorothy, daughter of John Wroxham, Esq., of Knill Court in the county of Hereford by Jane his wife daughter of John Jones, Esq., of Llandinity in the county of Brecknock, and had no surviving issue. He married secondly in 1677, Phoebe daughter of ——— Elvin, Esq., of Shropshire, by whom he had two sons and a daughter, viz.:

John, his heir.

Edward, born in 1681, who married Anne, daughter and co-heiress (with Mary, the wife of Sir John Philipps, Bart. of Picton Castle) and another daughter, who married John Richards (of Cardiff), of Edward Shephard of London, Merchant, and had issue:

1. Edward who married Elizabeth, daughter of John Bowen, Esq., of Tilbah.
2. Elizabeth married to Christopher Lane-Bowdy LL.D., but had no issue.
3. Charlotte, married to Edward Bell, Esq., and had a daughter, who married James Greene, Esq., of Kingston, Surrey.
4. Anne, married to Peregrine Fortye, Esq., and died somewhat.

Elizabeth.

Mr. Greenolle espoused thirdly in 1692, Dorothy, eldest of Thomas Shepwood, Esq., of Wilton in the county of Hereford, and had four other daughters, viz.:

Dorothy, married to Nicholas Taylor, Esq., of Broadheath, in Worcestershire, by whom she had an only child who married Rev. John Ingram of Stafford (she died without issue).

Rose, married to the Rev. John Browne, D. D., vice-chancellor of Oxford, and their grandson left issue, a daughter Mary, married to Thomas Dickinson, Esq., of Abbotsmore, in Cheshire, and two sons, one of whom died a bachelor, the other surviving Catherine, daughter of the Right Hon. Isaac Gascoyne, was the father of a daughter, who married Captain Burdett, R. N. [Royal Navy.]

Alice, married to ——— Howarth, Esq., of Cassalis, Radnorshire, and had issue:

Mary Howarth, died unmarried.

Humphrey Howarth, a Colonel in the Army, and M. P. for Evesham, who died s. p.

Edward Howarth, Esq., who died s. p.

Maria Howarth, Mary Howarth—both died unmarried.

Charlotte Howarth married to Henry Allen, Esq., of the Lodge, Devonshire.

Anne, married to ——— Dawson, Esq.

Mr. Greenly died 25th May, 1735, at the advanced age of ninety, having been for many a year a useful and active magistrate of the county of Hereford. In 1679 he had purchased the lease of the manor of Tilley and copyhold lands, held at a yearly rent, and has no renewal of lease under the College of Winchester. He was succeeded by his son.

JOHN GREENLEE, Esq., of Tilley, who married first, in 1700, Frances, daughter of ——— Atkinson, Esq., of Shropshire, by whom he had an only child, Frances, married to the Rev. Herbert Bradford, of Sheldon, in Herefordshire, and died without issue, in 1703. Mr. Greenly wedded secondly, Elizabeth, daughter and co-heiress [with her sister Hannah, the wife of John Floyer, Esq., of Whitehouse, in the county of Monmouth] of John Bowthier, Esq., and Elizabeth his wife, sole heiress of John Williams, Esq., of Cwmla in the county of Brecon, by whom he had issue,

John, who died in 1732.

Edward, Andrew, } both died in infancy.

William, present paragraphist.

Elizabeth, married to her cousin Edward Greenly, Esq., of Darkiow Hall, Surry, and had issue:

Edward, who died unmarried in 1802.

Elizabeth.

Catherine, married first to John Monckton, Esq., and had one only, who died unmarried. She wedded secondly, Edmund Mackelyne, Esq., of Tanant Down, in Wilts, brother of Viscountess Clive, and thirdly, William Halford, Esq.

Mr. Greenly was succeeded by his son.

WILLIAM GREENLEE, Esq., of Tilley Court, in the county of Hereford, born 9th February, 1741, married 9th July, 1770, Elizabeth, only daughter and heiress of John Brown, Esq., of Little Lonthall, in the same shire. [By Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Benjamin Goodhew, Esq., of London] and has an only daughter.

Elizabeth Brown, who married 4th April, 1811, Sir Isaac Coffin, Bart. admiral of the White, who thereupon assumed the additional surname and arms of Greenly. Mr. Greenly is [1836] a magistrate and deputy lieutenant of Herefordshire and was sheriff for the county of Brecon in 1816.

PRESBYTERIAN PERSECUTION

[As the Grantons were Presbyterians, the following will be of interest to the various families and give them a better understanding of the sturdy strength of character and deep-seated religious principles of their forefathers. Those who subscribed the covenants were called Covenanters.]

When queen Elizabeth died on March 24, 1603, James VI was proclaimed her successor. He had a fond aversion to a Presbyterian Church, and so fond a love for a church on the Episcopalian plan. A Presbyterian Church, he had found, could not be easily induced to do royal bidding. He was not long master of the English throne before he applied himself to his cherished design of putting down the Presbyterian and setting up the Episcopal Church in Scotland.

The Scotch make of religion their main guiding standard of life and rule of conduct. Its requirements are supreme over those of any temporal or political consideration. Its functions and obligations are superior to those of any secular authority, often, indeed, more sacredly regarded than the bond which binds together the social fabric.

In Scotland, also, the tree of liberty had a more favorable soil and less burdensome bonds than in England, and it was watered and nourished by the blood of many martyrs. The power of the nobles was more frequently opposed to that of the king, and as a result there was often a division and sometimes a disregard of authority. Under these conditions, the rights of the people were more fully regarded. Then, when John Knox sowed the soil and fertilized the roots with his Calvinistic doctrines of equality and liberty, the result was a rapid growth and a complete bursting of restraining bonds.

John Knox, a man of learning, eloquence, and fearless courage, led led the reformers to victory. A system of education was provided for the people. The principles of Protestantism sank into their hearts and changed the habits of their lives. In two generations men of clay were transformed into men of iron. An ignorant and changeable people became the foremost race in the world, possessed of all the qualities necessary to render the Celts of Ireland subject to the authority of England. Hitherto English colonists had been absorbed by the Irish. But now another description of colonist was to settle in Ulster, capable of holding the Celt in subjection, and keeping the "back door" of access to England closed against all her enemies. After James became King of England, he appointed as Lord Deputy of Ireland, Sir Arthur Chichester, who desired to see the country colonized with men of his own race and religion. It was reported that he intended to seize the earl of Tyrconnel and the earl of Tyrone, both of whom had been in rebellion against the Government. But these two chieftains, with many of their friends, fled from the country in 1607, and never returned. All their estates, embracing the six counties of Ulster (now Londonderry, Tyrone, Armagh, Cavan, Fermanagh, and Donegal), were immediately confiscated by the Crown, and became available for purposes of plantation.

Colonists from North Britain had already possessed themselves of large portions of Down and Antrim, the two counties lying nearest to Scotland, some years before the inception of King James's "Great Plantation."

At the beginning of the seventeenth century, the north half of county Down was ruled by one of the cadets of the great O'Neill family, who bore the name, Con McFerdo Kellymore Fitzrough O'Neill, and lived in the old mansion house of Castlewrath, two or three miles distant from Carrickfergus Castle (now Belfast). Toward the end of the year 1602, Con happened to be entertaining some relatives in his halls of Castlewrath, when his wine gave out. A fresh supply which had been ordered from Spain, had been brought as far as Belfast, but was detained on its arrival there by the queen's customers, until Con should pay a heavily imposed duty, concerning which he neither knew or understood anything. The old chieftain's blood arose, and he ordered some of his retainers to proceed to Belfast and bring the wine to Dunn. There his servants had an encounter with some English soldiers, and in the melee one of the soldiers was killed. O'Neill was therefore accused of "keeping war against the queen," and lodged in Carrickfergus Castle. Sir Arthur Chichester proposed to hang him. In this extremity Con's wife communicated with a friend in Scotland, one Hugh Montgomery, who was the Laird of Braidstane, in Ayrshire. He had been looking for an eligible "settlement" in the north of Ireland, and kept himself posted as to what went on there through relatives who visited in Ireland from the port of Irvine. In consideration of the service in himself of one-half of Con's lands in county Down, he assisted the prisoner to escape. Con entered into an agreement with Hugh Montgomery, by which he ceded to that gentleman half his lands in Clandeboye, on condition that the latter should obtain a free pardon from King James, and get him permission to kiss the king's hand. This Montgomery proceeded to do, but, finding his own influence at court not sufficient, he was obliged to have recourse to a brother Scot, whose word had more weight with him. This was James Hamilton, who had been employed by James I as his political agent in Dublin. With his assistance Con received free pardon and was permitted to return to his home at Castlewrath. It had become necessary for Con to increase his grant and concession to Montgomery by making it sufficiently large to satisfy James Hamilton also. So, when the patent was finally issued it granted to the said James Hamilton all the lands in the upper Clandeboye and the Great Ards which had been possessed by Con, or by his father in his lifetime. Hamilton had previously entered into an agreement with Montgomery and O'Neill as to what portion he should retain and what portion Montgomery should receive. Both Montgomery and Hamilton, as soon as their patents were passed by the Irish Council, crossed over into Scotland to call upon their kith and kin to aid them in the plantation of their vast estates. Both were Lowlanders, from the southern districts of the country. From them are descended numerous families in Ulster. The land which Hamilton had acquired was "planted" with Scots, but because, the most of them ordinarily from the same counties in Scotland—Ayr, Renfrew, Wigtown, Dumfries, and Kirkcudbright—as the men who followed Montgomery.

The northern counties of Ireland had long been held by the Macdonnells, a race which also peopled the island of Islay, and Cantyre on the mainland of Scotland.

The plantations in county Down and county Antrim, thorough as they were as far as they went, were limited in scope in comparison with the "Great Plantation of Ulster," for which James I's reign will be forever remembered in Ireland. The plan adopted for the colonization of the six "undertaken" counties was to take possession of the fertile portions of this great tract of country, amounting in all to nearly four million acres, to divide it into small estates, none larger than two thousand acres, and to grant them to men of known wealth and substance. Those who accepted grants were bound to live on their land themselves, to bring with them English and Scotch settlers, and to build for themselves and for their tenants fortified places of defence, houses to live in, and churches in which to worship. The purpose was not only to transfer the ownership of the land from Irish to Scot, but to introduce a dominant population in place of an Irish one. In 1608, the forfeited lands were surveyed by commissioners, many grants were made to undertakers and servitors, and all things prepared for planting Ulster with another race, professing another religion. The next year the settlers began to arrive. Some came from England, but most from Scotland. The English settled in the southern part of the province, while the Scots occupied the north and centre. With their lands at a nominal rent, their stocking and their tools, manufactured by themselves, with lime and wooden sheds, cattle and horses, to sell, the colonists began to thrive. The success of the settlers induced many of their friends from Scotland to follow. Then came James's great scheme of colonization in 1610, which threw open the other six counties for English and Scottish settlers.

Although more than three-fourths of the seventeenth century settlers in Ulster were Presbyterians, no effort was seen to be made to include them in the Episcopal establishment. After James came to the throne in 1603 he became so much a persecutor of the Puritans in the South as he had been of the Presbyterians in the North.

Three events of greater or less relative importance characterize the reign of King James. The first of these was a new translation of the Bible into English. The second event for which the reign of James will be forever memorable was the confiscation of the estates of the banished Catholic earls of Ulster, the eviction of the native Irish from those estates, and their consequent plantation and exploitation by Scottish and English "undertakers" or colonists with the king's patent. The third event was James's persecution of the Independents in England, and the oppression of the Presbyterians in Scotland. As a result of these persecutions, John Robinson's Pilgrim followers were compelled to seek a refuge in Holland, and later in America, where they founded the Puritan Commonwealth; while many of the learned and most independent spirits in Scotland crossed over to the new settlements in Ulster, where they likewise helped to build up democratic institutions and families that have added such a large and influential element to the Anti-Jacobite population of America.

Any one, though the nearest relative, who should shelter, aid, or in any way minister to the wants of those denounced, was held liable to the same penalty as the person assisted. All landholders were required to give bond that their families and dependants should abstain from attending any conventicle. To enforce these wicked laws torture was freely used to extort evidence to con-houses; families were refused to run by merciless fines, the prisons were filled with victims of oppression; multitudes were banished and sold as slaves; women and even children were tortured or murdered for refusing to take an oath they could not understand; soldiers were quartered upon the delinquentes nonconformists and allowed free license; men were hunted like wild beasts, and shot or gibbeted along the highways.

Those who suffered from these oppressions, both pastors and people, accordingly began to look elsewhere for a place of refuge. The Presbyterians of the South conspired to seek nowhere to Holland and America. Those of the North were principally to Ireland, although the laws there against nonconformity were sweeping, and the laws enforcing in some places imposed to prove them. King James died in 1625 and was succeeded by his son Charles, a monarch as tyrannical, unprincipled, and willful as his father, but one of a less scientific spirit. In the Established Church of England he found a willing supporter, and used it to carry out his designs.

At this period, high rents in Scotland were driving the people to Ulster at the rate of four thousand a year, just as the land-rents, a century later, drove them from Ulster to America. The ways of administration seemed wonderfully from reason and Christ, and unintelligible from liberty. Had this movement continued, the royal population would soon have been so numerous as to lose the solidarity of the nation. But Presbyterians, being then firmly attached to their faith, were not inclined to settle in a country where they would be deprived of proper ordinances. The persecutions in Ireland soon checked the emigration from Scotland.

Meanwhile, in Scotland the attempt of the king to impose the liturgy on the people met with most determined opposition. He had many loyal supporters in all parts of Scotland, but the storm of popular indignation swept everything before it. The king's opponents banded themselves together by the national covenant (see page 24) and re-established Presbyterianism. The king attempted to maintain his cause by the sword, but was unsuccessful, and obliged to ratify in parliament all that had been done by his opponents.

The Irish Presbyterians, strongly opposed to the forms of prelacy, sympathized with their brethren in Scotland, and went the clergy of the Episcopal Church failed to carry out the provisions of the canons they had signed.

Charles having failed in his plans of raising money to carry on the war with the Scots, summoned another English Parliament, which met on the 3d of November, 1640, and is known as the Long Parliament. The Irish Presbyterians, through Sir John Clotworthy of Antrim, petitioned this Parliament for redress of their many grievances. They recounted the persecutions they had endured, they complained that their "learned and unimpeachable" ministers had been harassed, and the case of their wife committed to Dublin Castle, who numbered only five or six pounds a year, that the rectors through conformity of their bishops were non-resident, and the people perished from want of spiritual food, and that all this time masses were publicly celebrated "to the great grief of God's people, and horrors of idolatry and superstition." They prayed Parliament to redress their grievances and especially to release their imprisoned pastors.

The grievances of Ireland were now complained in Sir John Pennyn and Sir

John Bertram, both Puritans. Under these guidance, the Parliament abolished the court of High Commission, and religious liberty was practically re-established. The exiled Presbyterians began to return, until shortly after 1649 there were thirty regular congregations in Ulster, and it seemed as if peace and prosperity were about to reign in Ireland.

Certain descendants of the northern chieftains whose estates had been confiscated at the beginning of the century, and others who had themselves gone away when very young, lived at the courts of Rome and Madrid. These exiles, thinking the English were fully occupied with their own disputes, formed a plan with friends in Ireland for expelling the settlers, and reestablishing Protestantism in the country. When this plot was almost ripe for execution, Charles, thinking he had gained Scotland by lately made concessions, opened a correspondence with some Irish Roman Catholic leaders. He promised them many civil and religious advantages, including a legal establishment of the Roman Catholic faith in Ireland, if they would take up arms in his behalf, and disarm all Irish Protestants except the Ulster Scots, whom the king imagined he might unite with their kinsmen in Scotland. But the leaders of the old Irish, hearing of this design, determined to begin the rebellion at once, to anticipate the Anglo-Norman families who were gained by Charles, and to rob and murder for their own advantage rather than for the advantage of the king. At first, the rebels acted with comparative moderation. They contented themselves with robbing the Protestants, stripping them naked, and sending them off defenceless. But they soon abandoned this moderation, and aimed at murdering the entire native Protestant population. Neither woman nor infant was spared. The brains of the children were dashed out before the eyes of their mothers, some were thrown into pots of boiling water, and some were given to the pigs that they might be eaten. A Protestant minister was crucified. Many had their hands cut off or their eyes put out before their lives were taken. Others were promised protection on condition of their becoming the executioners of their own nearest and dearest relations, but if they accepted these terms, they themselves were afterwards murdered. Many were promised their lives on condition of conforming the papacy, but any who recanted were told that, being now in the true Church, they must be killed at once lest they might afterwards fall from faith. Various calculations have been made of the number who perished, and it probably reached more than ten thousand. At first, the king's orders were obeyed and the Scots suffered no injury. Many of them succeeded in escaping, but some perished by being too confident.

Oliver Cromwell, having crushed the Parliament supreme in England, and the Independents supreme in Parliament, went to Ireland to act as Lord Lieutenant. On the 15th of August, 1649, he landed at Dublin. On the 2d of September he invested Drogheda, which had been garrisoned by the best of Ormond's soldiers, most of whom were English. A summons to surrender being rejected, Cromwell took the town by storm on the 11th, and put the garrison with many defenseless inhabitants to the sword. At Wexford he exercised the same severity. Other towns round them gave way, surrendered. Tenaghan sent north to cooperate with Coote, met him at Belfast, which was taken on September 30th. On the 5th of December these generals gained a great victory over Lord Montgomery, not far from Lanark. Robert Wishart, bishop of Glasgow, at the hand of the Irish, was defeated near Lanarkmoor. The long contest was over. Ireland, for the first time in her history, was completely subdued.

During all this time the Irish Presbyterians were closely watched lest they might supplant the crown of Charles. By a council of war, an act of banishment was pronounced against their ministers. Many of them fled from the country, and others, in the dress of farmers, travelled through their parishes and preached in private houses, or in the fields, at the risk of imprisonment. The "engagement" was now pressed on the consciences of public officers, and many penalties inflicted on those who refused to swear.

But after Charles left the kingdom, the government of Ireland seemed less inclined to persecute Presbyterians. During the period of Episcopal supremacy, the practice was to press with full force against Presbyterians, the penal laws seldom enforced against Catholics.

Oliver Cromwell died on the 3d of September, 1658, and his son Richard was proclaimed his successor. Henry Cromwell was promoted to be lord lieutenant of Ireland, and continued to rule the country with wisdom and vigor. Life and property had been rendered safe. Liberty of conscience for almost all classes of Protestants had been established. Many settlers from England and Scotland had been "planted" in the Celtic districts of the South and West. In Ulster, populous had been doubled, woods cut down, and farmhouses built. Presbyterianism made rapid progress.

Charles II, at the time of his father's death, was a friendless fugitive. The Scots offered to receive him as their king, on condition that he should pledge himself by oath to support and preserve their Presbyterian form of Church government. To this he assented. When he arrived in the kingdom he subscribed the covenant, and agreed to his coronation, under circumstances of much more than usual solemnity, he swore to preserve it inviolate. The Scots, accordingly, armed in his behalf, but, decided among themselves, and led by a general only to cope with Cromwell, they were soon defeated and Charles was again driven to the Continent. When he returned in 1660, he unhesitatingly renounced his promise to the Scots, to whom his restoration had been greatly promoted, and to interfere with the liberty of their Church. No sooner, however, was he firmly seated on his throne than all those oaths and promises were forgotten. Presbyterianism was at once abolished and Episcopacy established, not much as it was under James I, when bishops were little more than standing mouthpieces of the Presbyterians, and invested by the arbitrary mandate of the king, with the fulness of ecclesiastical power. An act was passed making it penal even to speak publicly or privately against the king's supremacy, or the government of the Church by archbishops and bishops. A court of high commission, of which all the prelates were members, was created and armed with inquisitorial powers. Multitudes of learned and pious ministers were ejected from their parishes, and deprived, unjustly too, for the most part, introduced in their stead. For the people were forced under severe penalties, to attend the administrations of these incumbents. All special meetings were prohibited; preaching or praying except in their own families, and preaching or praying in the fields was made punishable by death.

The last of the seventeenth century probably saw the last of the emigration of Scots into Ulster, while for years they were to follow, the Scots were to have Ulster as thousands for pioneers. For some time after the Revolution, a steady stream of Scotch Presbyterians had passed into the country attracted by the cheapness of the farms and by the new opening for trade. In the end of the seventeenth century the state of England was not a prosperous one, and her woolen manufacturers imagined the competition from Ireland was injuring them. The next year the Government passed an Act through the Irish Parliament, forbidding the exportation of Irish woolens from the country. It was afterwards followed by Acts forbidding the Irish to export their wool to any country save England—the English manufacturers desiring to get the wool of Irish sheep kingdom at their own price.

There are two outstanding facts in the history of Ulster besides the rise of the linen manufacture—the yearly emigration, and the rise of the Presbyterian Church. The latter is strong proof of the kinship to Scotland, the former is, perhaps even a stronger proof of the blood which was in her veins, for they left Ulster as their forefathers had come to it, in search of a more kindly home across the seas. The emigration from Ulster is one of the most striking features of Irish history, and one which had a most marked effect on the vital force of the United States of America, which drew so much of its best blood from the Presbyterians of the North of Ireland. There was nothing to induce the enterprising men of the North to remain in Ireland, and they left in crowds, going away with wives and children, never to return. In 1714, there is mention of "both ministers and people going off." In 1728, it is stated that "above 4,000 men, women, and children have been shipped off hence for the West Indies, within these years." In consequence of the famine of 1740, it is stated that for "several years afterwards, twelve thousand emigrants annually left Ulster for the American plantations," while from 1771 to 1773, "the whole emigration from Ulster is estimated at thirty thousand, of whom ten thousand were weavers." Thus was Ulster drained of the young, the enterprising, and the most energetic and desirable classes of its population. They left the land which had been given to England by the swords of their fathers, and crossed the sea to escape from the galling tyranny of the bishops whom Ireland had made rulers of that land. They came to a new and a better land, and here they founded their homes, built their churches, established their communities, and again set up their religion.

Before the close of the seventeenth century, there were at least twelve Presbyterian churches established in America, the members of which were, to a large extent, of Scottish or Scotch-Irish birth or descent. Five of these churches were in Maryland, two in Virginia, two in Delaware, one in Pennsylvania, one in New Jersey, and one in South Carolina. During the first two decades of the eighteenth century additional Presbyterian churches were organized in the American colonies by emigrants from Scotland and Ulster.

The causes which led to the eighteenth-century emigration from Ulster to America have already been pointed out, and may be summarized as follows.

1. Religious persecution by the Episcopal authorities, of a nature most galling and outrageous, one incident being the loss of the rights of citizenship.

3. A system of unjust and onerous institutions, which served to discourage thrift and enterprise.

4. Prohibitory Commissions against the trade and manufactures of Ulster in favor of those of England.

5. The enforced payment of tithes to the Episcopal clergy, to sustain a Hierarchy which the Presbyterians believed to be contrary to the laws of God, and knew to be destructive to their own rights and liberties.

The records of the actual emigration from Ulster to America are very meagre and imperfect. Few records have been preserved of the departures of vessels from ports in Scotland or Ireland prior to the present century, and such incomplete lists of passengers as have come down to us are their preservation, rather to accidents than to design.

While the settlements of the Scotch-Irish in New England, Virginia, and the Carolinas were numerous and represented a population of many thousand families, the great majority of the Ulster emigrants to America first landed on the Delaware shore. Most of the passenger ships sailing from Ireland during the eighteenth century were bound for ports in the Quaker colony. Pennsylvania thus became the centre of the Presbyterian settlements in the New World, and from the province, after 1730, a continuous stream of emigration flowed to the South and West.

The emigrants to Pennsylvania usually landed at one of the three ports, Lewes, Newcastle (both in Delaware then a part of Pennsylvania), or Philadelphia. Presbyterian congregations were gathered in all of these towns before 1800. During the first decade of the eighteenth century the Scotch-Irish made settlements along White Clay, Red Clay, and Brandywine creeks in Newcastle county, Delaware, and at the head of Elk creek on both sides of the Pennsylvania-Maryland boundary, at its intersection with the Delaware line. The church at the head of Christiana creek was organized before 1708. Two years later the congregations of Donegal and Paxtang, in Delaware, and Octoraro, in Pennsylvania, were gathered, and the year 1724 brought into existence six more Presbyterian churches: Neshaminy and Abington, in what is now Montgomery county, and Great Valley, in Chester County, all in Pennsylvania; and Cedar Creek, Dover, and Murderkill, in Delaware. The congregations of these churches were composed of Scotch, Dutch, and Welsh settlers. Before 1730 the Scotch-Irish had extended their settlements westward to the south of the Susquehanna, and were sufficiently numerous to form three new congregations.

Of the total white population in America at the outbreak of the Revolution, there is abundant evidence to show that at least one-third was not of English descent or sympathies at all, but composed of a variety of nationalities, including the Germans, French, Hollanders, Swedes and others. But the settlements of all these different nationalities taken together did not begin to equal in number or importance those of the Scots of North Britain and North Ireland, a composite race, even at that time having in the organic makeup of each individual a combination of the several racial elements which were almost identical with those now forming the present collective population of America, and from which the Americans of the future is gradually being evolved.

Driven from their original homes in the North of Ireland by English power [illegible] Grew was turned into their very souls the bitter vituperations of English ingratitude and English broken faith. They were no English in their origin, and they came to America hating England, her church, and her form of government with the intensest hatred. Mingled with the descendants of many other races, they nevertheless formed the kernel of the determinately and intensely American stock who were the pioneers of our people in their march westward, the vanguard of the army of fighting settlers, who with axe and rifle won their way from the Alleghanies to the Rio Grande and the Pacific. That these Irish Presbyterians were a bold and hardy race is proved by their at once pushing past the settled regions, and plunging into the wilderness as leaders of the white civilization. Not indeed, they were well fitted to be Americans from the very start; they were kinsfolk of the Covenanters; they deemed it a religious duty to interpret their own Bible, and hold for divine right the doctrine of their own clergy. For generations their whole ecclesiastic and educational system had been fundamentally democratic.

The term "Scotch-Irish" is peculiarly American. The word seems to have come into general use since the Revolution, having been first taken as a name by many individuals of a very large class of people in the United States, descendants of emigrants of Scottish blood from the North of Ireland. The name was not used by the first of these emigrants, neither was it generally applied to them by the people whom they met there. They usually called themselves "Scotch," just as the descendants of their former neighbors in Ireland do today, and as do some of their own descendants in this country, who seemingly are averse to acknowledging any connection with Ireland. The application "Scotch-Irish" is not, as many people suppose, an indication of Hibernio-Scottish descent, although it could be properly so used in many cases. It was first appropriated as a distinctive cognomen by, and is now generally applied to, the descendants in America of the early Scotch Presbyterian emigrants from Ireland. THE NATIONAL COVENANT

The National Covenant was a bond of union or agreement, drawn up at Edinburgh in 1638, by the leading Presbyterian ministers, and subscribed by vast numbers of persons of all ranks of life. It embodied the confession of faith of 1580 and 1581, subscribed by James VI in his youth, and again renounced in 1590 and 1596, and was binding on all who signed it to spare nothing which might save their religion. The subscribing of the national covenant began on the 28th of February, 1638 in the Greyfriars' church and church yard at Edinburgh. Transcripts copies were also circulated through the country for signatures—a circumstance which attests for many copies being still extant. "In the library of the faculty of advocates at Edinburgh are preserved five parchment copies with the original signatures of Rothes, Montrose, Loudon, and many others of the nobility, gentry, commissioners of counties and burghs, and ministers; though only one of these five copies is apparently annotated with the first signing, and the other four, which are dated 1639, were subscribed after the ratification of the General assembly." [Davidson's Historical Sketch Illustrative of the National Confession of Faith, Edinburgh.

1643 to which we owe for a century of [illegible]. The general assembly, which met at Glasgow, November 21, 1638, ratified the national covenant and the confession of faith which it contained, and deposed the whole of the episcopacy which had been established by Charles I. The national covenant was subsequently ratified by the act of the second parliament of Charles I, held at Edinburgh June 11, 1640, and subscribed by Charles II at Spey, June 23, 1650, and Scone, January 1, 1651. The covenant will be found in the volume which comprehends the Westminster Confession of Faith, in use by the church of Scotland. Those who subscribe the national covenant, promise to "continue in obedience of the doctrine and discipline of this kirk." They also give assent to various acts of parliament in the reign of James VI, which besides repudiating the jurisdiction of the pope, and all the ceremonial observances and terms of the Roman church, ordain "all papists, willful hearers, and consenters of the same, the hearers and receivers of the priests, Jesuits, and Seiting Papists, to be punished without any exception or restriction."

THE SOLEMN LEAGUE AND COVENANT

The Solemn League and Covenant was a document of date Sept. 25, five years later than the National Covenant, upon the signing of which, Charles I had broken, with the English parliament, and up the standard at Nottingham (August, 1642), and from the various variations it assumed as it he might be able finally to establish Episcopacy in Scotland. With some show, on this ground, the Scots willingly received overtures from commissioners deputed from the English parliament. These were held out to the Scottish nation that in event of success against the king, the Presbyterian model should supersede the Episcopalian both in England and Ireland. Approving of a measure of this kind, the Scottish senate entered into what was called a solemn league and covenant with the English parliament. One of the provisions of the bond of agreement was, that the Scots should send an army into England against the king, which they did in January, 1644.

The solemn league and covenant was subscribed by many of all ranks in Scotland and England, including the assembly of divines at Westminster, was ratified by the general assembly at Edinburgh August 17, 1643, and the Scottish parliament, June 15, 1644, and subscribed by Charles II at Spey, 1650, and Scone, 1651. Like the national covenant, it has, till the present day, a place in the volume which comprehends the Westminster Confession of Faith of the church of Scotland.

While the national covenant refers to the observance of the Presbyterian polity within Scotland alone, the solemn league and covenant is much more comprehensive. Those who subscribe it, setting out with a profession of attachment to the church of Scotland, go on endeavor to bring about a uniformity in religion and church-discipline in the three kingdoms, and further "That we shall in like manner, without respect of persons, endeavor the extirpation of popery, prelacy (that is church-government by archbishops, bishops, their chancellors, and commissaries, deans, deans and chapters, archdeacons, and all other ecclesiastical officers depending on that hierarchy), superstition, heresy, schism, profaneness and whatsoever shall be found to be contrary to sound doctrine and the power of godliness, lest we partake of other men's sins, and thereby be in danger to receive of their plagues, and that the Lord may be one, and his name one, in the three kingdoms."

Such were the famous covenants, at one time enforced by civil penalties, and for which their adherents, under the name of covenanters, fought and suffered in Scotland, between the restoration and the revolution, maintaining in the last that both covenants, notwithstanding certain retrospective acts of parliament, were still binding on the whole nation. At the revolution the two covenants were set aside, and cannot be said to have now any practical effect in any part of the United Kingdom. As above stated, they have a place in the volume which comprehends the Westminster Confession of Faith, but for what reason it is difficult to say, for the Church of Scotland does not make allegiance to them obligatory on either elected or lay members. Certain Scottish and Irish dissenters, however, still profess attachment to the covenants, and on particular occasions renew their subscription of them. They are called Covenanters or Reformed Presbyterians. The obligations undertaken by the sovereign, and the modern acts of parliament abolishing religious tests on taking civil office, and admitting Roman Catholics, Non-conformists, and Jews to Parliament, not to speak of public opinion, are totally at variance with the covenants. It is customary in popular lectures on the Covenanters to overlook the fact, in compassion for their sufferings, that they contended for what is now quite adverse to the principle of religious toleration. Yet, in so far as the zealful struggle in which they were concerned helped to accelerate the revolution, the history of the Covenanters must ever be associated with that of civil and religious liberty.

THE FIRST GREENLEES IN AMERICA

Traditions assume the Greenlees in England as early as the reign of Alfred the Great [871]. These names appear on the records as far back as the reign of Edward IV [1461]. Later we find Greenlees settled around and about the parishes of Lockerbie[1], Hoddom, and neighborhood, in the time known as the twenty years of the killing time in Scotland. The Greenlees, like many other families, felt into Argyleshire, thence to Ireland. Again, religious persecution was the prime cause which led them to leave the north of Ireland and emigrate to America.

MICHAEL GREENLEE of Kent County, Delaware was born "about 1700" and came to this country from Ireland when he was "about 16 years old." As the lists of passengers from Ireland about that time were very incomplete and many records have been destroyed, we have been unable to learn anything definite regarding his emigration. It is probable that he came with his father and other members of the family. He may have emigrated in 1718 when a number left Ireland "with sorrowing and people going off." A Presbyterian church had been established in Shortlidge, Delaware in 1714. The earliest record we have of Michael Greenlee is February 12, 1736 when he bought land in "the forest of Shortlidge Hundred" Kent County, Delaware.

JOHN GREENLEE, a brother of Michael, also settled in Delaware and had a son, Robert, born in Delaware in 1736. This is possibly the John Greenlee (see Unidentified, No. 27) who was living in Kent County, Delaware in 1767 and to whom your bought land in the "forest of Whether Creek Hundred," and died before May 27, 1782, survived by his widow, Priscilla, being appointed administrator. The settlement of this estate would undoubtedly have furnished additional data but could not be found as many of the early Delaware records have been destroyed.

ARCHIBALD GREENLEE of Washington County, Pennsylvania was born in Scotland about 1735 and settled in Washington County, Pennsylvania before 1780. We have been unable to ascertain how long he remained there. He children emigrated to Ohio.

EDWARD GREENLEE came from Ireland after 1775 and settled in Mason County, Virginia (now West Virginia). He was probably a brother of William of West Virginia.

JAMES GREENLEE of Rockbridge County, Virginia, born in 1797, came from the north of Ireland about 1727, landed in Delaware and soon after went to Carlisle, Pennsylvania where he survived. In 1737 he settled in Rockbridge County, Virginia.

[1] Charlie Gamble is a parish about five miles up hill, the most southerly of Dumfriesshire and adjoining on the west coast of Kirkcudbright, called Dalry. It has eight miles from the village of Lochar, twenty-five miles from the monument of Argyll and eleven miles from Gatehouse. It is twenty miles across to Ireland.

JAMES GREENLEE of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania was born in 1716 in the north of Ireland. The date of his emigration is not known but his name appears as early as 1738 on the tax list of Hanover Township, Lancaster County, Pennsylvania where he spent the remainder of his days.

JAMES GREENLEE of Tennessee came from Ireland, spent some time in Pennsylvania, then settled on the Potomac River in Virginia. He was living in North Carolina in 1775. His descendants settled in Tennessee.

ROBERT GREENLEE of Pennsylvania was probably born in Scotland. His father came from Scotland in an early day and settled in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. The earliest definite place record we have of Robert is at Clifton, Allegheny County, near which place his granddaughter was born in 1787.

WILLIAM GREENLEE of West Virginia was probably a brother of Edward of West Virginia. He came from Ireland in 1730 and settled at Botetourt County, Virginia. He probably removed to Mason County, Virginia (now West Virginia) with his sons John and Edward between 1780 and 1802.

Of these early Greenlees the only one we have been enabled to connect with Michael, is John of Kent County, Delaware. After a careful study of the subject, however, we are convinced that all the Greenlees above mentioned were closely related and that all the branches, both in this and foreign countries, spring from the same parent stock.

The hardships endured by pioneers in the New World in making and providing their homes, coupled with lack of facilities, gave them little opportunity for making and preserving family records. In many of the states no system of recording births, deaths and marriages was installed until a comparatively recent date. In England, Ireland and Scotland, where we expected to find a perfect system of records, it is almost impossible to trace many, now prominent, families. The ravages of time and the numerous wars in these countries are responsible in a measure for the destruction of many valuable records.

The different ways of spelling the name can not be considered as evidence that they were not of the same stock as we find many instances in old wills, deeds and other records where the name is spelled several ways in the same document. This will be found both in England and America and is partly attributed to a system of phonetic spelling which was in vogue.

DESCENDANTS OF MICHAEL GREENLEE

MICHAEL GREENLEE[1] was born about 1700, died in Kent County, Delaware (will dated November 8, 1766; proved January 1, 1767), married ——— ———; married second before November 26, 1751, ESTHER DAVIS, who was born about 1731, daughter of John Davis. She died about 1796. (See Administration of Will of Michael Greenlee.)

CHILDREN (given in order as mentioned in Will):

2	1	Samuel, married Mary Jones.
3	11	Mary, married ——— Huggins.
4	111	Elizabeth, married ——— Griffen.
5	IV	John, born 1750, married Nancy Hamilton.
6	V	James, born about 1755, married Sidney Downing, married second Hester Ann Willoughby.
7	VI	Michael, born April, 1759, married Deborah Manaway.
8	VII	Rachel, married ——— Stuart, or Stewart.
9	VIII	Mary, married March 1767.
10	IX	David, married Elizabeth Martin.
11	X	William, married ——— ———.
12	XI	Aden (posthumous child), born in 1774, married Sarah McKinney.

MICHAEL GREENLEE purchased land in Kent County, Delaware as early as 1756, but the following, related by Edmund Greenlee, as told him by his father, shows that he must have settled in Delaware many years before.

"My Grandfather Greenlee came from Ireland at the age of about 24 years, had no Irish brogue on his tongue, settled in Delaware near the Maryland line, his first wife's name unknown, had children by her. David Greenlee one of the sons moved to Georgia when quite young. His [David] had the small pox while at home and because very much pitted in face, an uncommon strength came before he growed tall, and my father said he was the smartest person to work he ever saw. Another son was William Greenlee, do not know where he lived, but the last letter received from him stated that he was going to move up the Red River. I do not remember hearing the age at which Grandfather married his first wife, but at the time of his second marriage he was 50 years of age. I do not know his second wife's given name or maiden name but she was 20 years of age when they were married. Grandfather at 80 years of age was very strong and active, he said he have taken a keg after it had been filled weighing 200 lbs. by the bunghole and lifted it from the ground with one hand, and could jump up and strike his feet together twice before touching the ground. He was by occupation a farmer. He had I think three children by second wife, Michael, Allen and I think a daughter Betsy."

The following deeds are on record in Kent County, Delaware.

40. X. Repentance, born September 17, 1809; married Nathaniel Mallory.
41. XI. Edmund, born March 11, 1811; married Mary Wright Stebbins.

MICHAEL GREENLEE was one of the oldest settlers of Crawford County, Pennsylvania. The Marson family in moving to Virginia passed through Fayette County, Pennsylvania, where Esther remained and did not go on with the family. She was living there with Rev. Woolbridge when Michael Greenlee married her. After his marriage he resided in Franklin County for a period of two years, then moved to Pittsburg, where he remained one year.

[illegible]

and then, in company with his family and a small colony of settlers, came up the Allegheny River and French Creek on a flat-bottom boat or raft, which was pushed up the stream with setting poles, to Meadville, where there was a small settlement. He brought with him eighteen bushels of flour, two bushels of salt pork, a lot of flax, one and one-half bushels of salt, one yoke of oxen, one cow, two two-year-old heifers, one mare, one large black walnut chest and other household goods. There was nothing but an Indian trail through the woods from Pittsburg to Meadville at that time, and the only stopping place at the whole distance was Adam Jones and Philip Dunn had settled. Here they stopped for a rest. During their trip up the river it rained so that their kids were getting wet, and he put boards on barrels for covering for his wife and little son, Robert. On this journey the five week was driven to the new home along the primitive trail through the forest, and on this trip Mr. Dunn had injured his back pushing the boat, from the effect of which he never recovered. He remained one year on French Creek Flats, near Meadville, where he raised a patch of corn. When the corn was ready to harvest, being unable to work, he took a chain and rode one of the cows into the field, where he hitched the chain around a shock of corn and drew it to a shed, thus saving his corn, while his neighbors left theirs on the field and it was swept down the creek in a freshet and was lost. The spring following, in March, 1797, he went on horseback to Tinicum Township, now Cussewago Township, and secured four hundred acres of land and built a small log cabin. When he went to look for the land, a man had agreed to come out from Meadville and bring him a gun and the corn, but disappointed him, and the consequence was that he was obliged to stay in the woods all night with his horse and dog, without fire or gun. There being four inches of snow on the ground. He made his bed beside a fallen tree, against which he stood pieces of bark for covering. His dog barked constantly, thus keeping the wild animals away, otherwise it seemed to him as though he must have been killed by them, as all through the long, weary night loud noises of the forest gave distinct evidence of their presence.

In order to get supplies for their families, the men had to go through the woods on footpaths along an Indian trail to Pittsburg. Having his chattels on one of these trips, which took several days, Mr. Dunnsbee's wife was very much annoyed by wolves, bears and panthers, which came alarmingly near. She took lighted pine torches and threw them at the animals, which were afraid of fire, thus keeping them away. A bonfire was used to cover the entrance to the little cabin and served in lieu of a door.

Then left Mr. Dunnsbee found the underbrush dug out and the large trees girdled, for which service he paid five dollars, and the ground was prepared for seed in as effective a way as possible. He brought one bushel of seed wheat, sowing four bushels, and seeded it on this acre of ground, which produced thirty bushels. There was a brush fence around this acre, somewhat protecting it from wild animals, but nevertheless it was necessary to guard it both day and night until the crop was harvested. That one bushel was all the wheat he ever bought for the use of his family. Being an invalid, as stated above, he was unable to personally do much farm work, so he took up the manufacture of reeds for weaving, and other similar work. He always kept a yoke of oxen, and changed work with his neighbors by letting them use his ox team, and thus managed to get his heavy farm work done—work his boys were unable to do because of their youth. It is said of him that he never gave a note in his life and never had a lawsuit.

A notable characteristic of the Gressler family has been equability of temperament. Each successive generation has shown the same mildness of disposition, the same gentle and kindly nature, and the deepest sympathy and regard for all men. Sterling integrity of character, strong mentality and excellent business ability have also been typified in the various representatives of the name. The family has ever stood for the highest order of citizenship, and has rendered strong allegiance to religious, educational and all other good work.

Mr. Gressler was a Five-day Baptist and his wife a Seventh-day Baptist, and accordingly they kept both days holy. Their home was always open to the itinerant clergymen of both denominations, and was to them noble pioneer workers in the Master's vineyard a home indeed. Mrs. Gressler, in the meantime lost her health and did most of her work in bed, such as sewing, knitting, mending, and sometimes spinning, the last work being accomplished by having one of the children turn the wheel for her. She was also quite a poet. The following sonnet is one of her compositions:

Joylessness and fear all things will prove
Except the Savior and his love
Remember he is a friend indeed
Escape therefore to him with speed.
May I now in my youthful prime
In virtue's ways spend all my time
And then I shall never happy be Transferred to Eternity.

Do thou dear Lord my footsteps guide
Into thy courts and near thy side
Nor from thee let me one depart
Help me to give to thee my heart.
And then thy Holy name I'll praise
Mount up and sing to endless days.

O may the youth there in this place
Be early blest with Gospel Grace,
And round about Zion's peace
Through the remainder of their days
May great King Shiloh's name be blest
And in him all his people rest
And to him people gathered be
From land to land and sea to sea.

Earth shall not my chief thoughts employ
Let Heaven fill my thoughts with joy

I long to rest in Christ's embrace
Dear still in the dwelling place
And there with him I long to meet
Before his throne and at his feet
Enlarge my heart O Lord I pray
To praise thy Holy name alway
Remembered now heavenly day

Look not my soul with pleasure bound
And joy to hear the gospel sound
Nothing so much delights my heart
As it I long to hear a part
Enjoy I would the light Divine
Lord Jesus with thee on me shine

Faithful let me always attend
To my dear Lord and early friend
The same Saviour I would praise
Now and through Everlasting Days

Joy is a fruit that will not grow
Amongst the sons of Sin and woe
Now I from them depart away
Employ my time to read and pray
So shall I run the heavenly way

On Earth there is nothing else I see
That I would for my own possess
For Lord thou hast no power to bless
O Lord I love thy ways to meet
And hear thine conversation sweet
When thus dear hearts are moved aright
The work is thine I take delight
Dear Lord thou knowest I long to be
Holy and heavly more like thee
Till I from Earth shall cease away
To dwell with my Dear Lord for ay

Bear up my heart through all my woes
In thy Dear Lord thou mayest repose
To Him look up for all thy joy
Remember worse all things else a toy
I long to find a blest word to rest
And Lord open my Saviour's Breast

Feb. 24. 1816.

Let me but hear my Saviour say
Come my Lord come thou away
Come Dearest Lord I thee would say

I long to see that heavenly way
Nothing but Christ deserves my love
Dearest of all the names above
And from him I would never move

Give me O Lord a sober mind
Renew'd in all Grace good instilled
Escape all evil, Grace I may
Ever keep the good the narrow way
Now Lord I would to Thee resign
Life and her powers which all are thine
Eternal life, Thou hast to give Eternal power shall Thou receive

Surely My Lord now I thee seek Xtend the prayers that I may speak
Pity my pain and helpless state
Encourage me on Thee to wait
Now for my help, my face confirmed
I long to see thy grace shewed
Enter with all Thy glorious train
No more let sin and Satan reign
Conquer my Foes so shall I sing
Eternal Praises to my King

May Dear Lucinda Greenlee live
And to King Jesus praises give
May she now in her youthful prime
Improve well the accepted time
And we let all her sisters Dear
Improve well every future year
That they may never have to say
I've Lost the Blessed Gospel Day

May they in youth Immanuel walk
That Christ alone can save from hell
And may they fly to him with speed
For now He is a friend indeed

ANDREW HAMILTON GREENLEE was educated in the military school in South Carolina. Having finished a term as sheriff of Lowndes County, Mississippi, he moved in 1836 to Attala County, Mississippi, where he purchased land. Clearing the first stick at Mahoma Spring, he built on the hill above the spring. From there he went to Choctaw County about 1840 and settled four miles east of Greensboro at Walnut Grove. He remained there until 1866, then moved to Panola County, Mississippi. He was Major in 1842 or 1843, and in 1845 was commissioned Adjutant on the staff of the 42nd Regiment of Mississippi Militia. October 9, 1847 he was installed as Colonel of the 34th Regiment of Mississippi Militia, and served a number of years. He took part in the Florida Indian war. He went to war under General Scott and General Zachary Taylor, and was at Buena Vista and Rio Grande. He went out as a private with the militia from Greensboro, Mississippi, in 1864, under Captain James Hill. He would not accept any office during the Civil War on account of the oath he had taken in 1845. He was a farmer and merchant and held offices of different kinds. In politics, he was a Democrat. Being a good public speaker, he took an active interest in the events of those days, and was interested in the erection of county buildings, churches, schools, railroads, etc., and in the advancement of the com[illegible] X. Jane A., born May 21, 1832, married Martin Hotchkiss.

ROBERT GREENLEE at the age of twelve years began to plow and do the heavy work on the farm, his father being in very feeble health, and from that time until his marriage was his main support of the family. The educational advantages were very meager, consisting of a few months at a district school. He teaching his eighteenth year he expected to attend school, but the call came for volunteers and he enlisted in the service of his country in the war of 1812. He took his knapsack on his back, and his trusty rifle, and went as far as Waterford the first day. He arrived in Erie the following day, and there went into camp under Captain Shaw, and remained there about four months. During his stay there, the British made an attempt to land, crossing on the ice. The small garrison resorted to strategy. They marched out from behind the bluff in full view of the enemy, then around behind the bluff, then out again, then giving the impression that a large force of men was stationed there, and the enemy fell back without making a battle.

After his marriage he settled on a farm near Bloomtown, Crawford County, Pennsylvania, where he lived until February, 1808, when he put his household effects and his family on an ox-sled and went by a path through the woods about eight or nine miles westward. There he had one hundred and sixty acres of land and had spent part of the previous summer in raising produce and preparing a home for his family. He cleared a few acres of land and built a log house near an excellent spring of water. The house was not finished when he moved his family in, and a blanket was hung up to serve as a door. They had one neighbor, Mr. Spicer. The next morning after their arrival Mr. Gennine went out to care for his stock. Mrs. Gennine hearing footsteps supposed he was returning and going to the door pushed the blanket aside and passed out her water pail, saying, "Here, Robert, just get a pail of water before you come in." Instead of Robert, it was Mr. Spicer who had come for a neighborly call. He took the pail without a word and filled it, then presented himself again at the door much to her astonishment and his amusement.

He soon after built another room with dome and windows. The most big houses of that days consisted of one room and the loft, which was reached by means of a ladder. Ground glass was used for windows. His house was a double one with punchon floors, and a four-paned glass window admitted light to the best room. The furniture consisted of six "Windsor" chairs, a full leaf table and a chest. In the best room was a bed with tester and valances of blue and white checked linen of Mrs. Gennine's own spinning and weaving. The wide fireplace with stick and wall chimney afforded abundant ventilation. The tops of the trees could be seen up through the chimney. A large "back log" often drawn in at the door by a horse and placed in position by a hand spike, and a "fire stick" held in place by andirons, with the intervening space filled with logs was the approved method of building a huge fire, which crackled and roared, filling the room with its genial warmth and ruddy glow. In 1808 he built a frame house, which still stands. To this humble home, where dwelt peace and love, were brought religious and agricultural papers, books, pictures and musical instruments. Here was established the family altar, from which ascended the daily incense of loving and trusted hearts, the mother's beautiful hymns with thrilling in the singing.

Mr. Gennine was a kind, conscientious man, and if it will find he was never known to speak a harsh word even to a dumb animal. That he was indulgent and generous was attested by his well-filled barn, clean barns and yard, large orchard, fine fruit, and the use of labor saving machinery. In politics he was a Whig, then Republican.

MRS. GREENLEE was a deeply religious woman. Before her marriage she was a member of Carmel Baptist Church, and he became a member soon after. At this church they were regular attendants, often going the eight or ten miles on foot and carrying a child in arms. Later they became members of the Spring and Cottonwood Church and helped build a house of worship about two and one-half miles from their home. This church disbanded and they became members of the Spring Church at Springtown. Mrs. Gennine attended her charity to all. The ministers of her church were never criticised nor their sermons spoken of disparagingly. A needy one was never turned away empty handed. Our memories will show the ready sympathy manifested them. It was said weather when a minister called at their house to spend the night. She was thrifty and, and after he went to bed, Mrs. Grimsley took themself from her room, sat and made under-clothing, and had them ready for the use in the morning.

MILES CURTIS settled in Summerhill Township, Crawford County, Pennsylvania, where he bought land and cleared away the timber to make the land ready for until. He resided there a number of years, then finding it necessary to obtain a better piece of land, he sold the farm and made another settlement within five miles of Deyfield, where he and his family took up the task of clearing the land of the large trees which so thickly covered it. Here he spent the remainder of his life. The children had only a district school education. The daughters learned to spin flax and wool with which to make their summer and winter clothing, under the instruction of their mother. In politics, he was a Republican, in religion Seventh day Baptist.

[illegible] [illegible] Ellen Chamberlain, born September 14, [illegible], married Ward Lawton Byron.

Four other children, names not given.

[illegible] LATTIN GREENLEE had very limited educational advantages. His mother taught him to read from the Bible, hymn book and Pilgrim's Progress, the only books in their humble home. He attended school three months one winter, walking three miles each day over rough roads and through forests infested by wild beasts, yet he acquired sufficient knowledge to make him successful in life. In the spring of 1856, he removed to Ohio and settled near Westville, now Joslyn. He lived on the same farm for forty years, then becoming unable to attend to the work, he sold the farm and bought a home in the town of Joslyn, where he spent the remainder of his life.

[illegible] WASHINGTON GREENLEE went to Kansas Territory in March, 1857, and wrote from there in August of the same year: "He rode about fifty miles without meeting a white man. He was delighted with the beauty of the country and the soft warm air, sleeping out of doors without cover, revolver in hand." He intended to go to Mexico and practice his profession, dentistry, but the year prior wrote from the same place: "He felt a great pressure in heading with the Mormons and without their wild life." He died and was buried on a spot now covered by the city of Tonopa.

[illegible] ELIZA ELAINE GREENLEE attended Kingsville Academy when it was in its youth and afterward was a student at Oberlin College. She spent the greater portion of her life in Joslyn, where she was closely identified with the Methodist Church and its people, filling the office of Superintendent of the Sabbath School and organist. After the death of her mother, she resided with her sister, Olive Thorne, at Kingsville.

172. V. Minerva Hodgson Stebbins, born September 16, 1873; died April 11, 1882
173. VI. Chloe Rachel Stebbins, born November 16, 1876; married Alfred Bennett Cate; c
174. VII. ——— Stebbins, born May 3, 1837; died aged 6 months
175. VIII. ——— Stebbins, born August, 1839; died in infancy.
176. IX. Robert Leonard Stebbins, born July 8, 1840; living at Hunterstown.
177. X. Matilda Louisada Stebbins, born September 11, 1842; living at Butte City, Montana; unmarried
178. XI. Benjamin Franklin Stebbins, born March 26, 1844; died July 26, 1862.
179. XII. Rufus Reginald Stebbins, born November 10, 1846; died September 23, 1848

LUCINDA GREENLEE, notwithstanding the poor facilities for education, was so persuasive that she succeeded in obtaining a very fair education for those times, and stored her mind with choice extracts from the best authors of the day. In early life she united with the Baptist Church and was a consistent and useful member of about twenty years. She subsequently became a member of the Universalist organization at Connaautville.

She was a remarkable woman, of quick wisdom and good judgment. Her economy and perseverance were exhibited in the home life in the material concerns of the family. Although the outline of her life was successful, her trials and sorrows were many but were borne patiently and bravely. To cheerfully accept the duties of life as they came and "make the best of things" was her dependable law. She was married to Lemuel Stebbins two or three years after he came to Pennsylvania. United in heart as well as in hand, they began life's battle in earnest, with little to help them but their strong arms and their abiding faith in God.

Mr. Stebbins prospered wonderfully and added to his farm, first the Elliot farm adjoining his on the east, then the Webster farm adjoining on the north. As the country became more developed he occasionally drove north to the eastern markets, bringing home with him news of the outside world, and some of the new inventions, notably the first stock cheese brought into the county, which received in its original process. On one of his eastern trips he purchased mulberry cuttings, and then silk worm eggs which were carefully hatched and cared for by the older girls, their brother Lee sometimes helping to gather the leaves for feeding. This experiment added to the children's knowledge and income. The girls spun the silk on their flax wheels and twisted it into skeins and the father sold it for them. Besides silk mitts and work bags which they made from some of the silk, they had black silk gowns bought with the proceeds from the sale of their silk. But the climate proved too damp for the tender worms and they died out the third or fourth year. The large mulberry trees stood across the road from the house, where a peach orchard afterward enriched the market.

[illegible]. He planted a large apple orchard on the southern exposure of a hill, also near the house he planted strawberry, pear and sugar plum trees, all of which bore fine fruit. For a time he was in the dry goods business at Montrose, Iowa. In 1860-61 he, in company with his brother John, his son Lot, and his son-in-law Silas Clark, and Minor Pepel, bought mind and ran the first cheese factory in that part of the state. He was very progressive in his business and made both butter and cheese of a high grade. At the time of his death he owned three hundred acres of land on which he had erected a steam grist and saw mill, the first one in that part of the country. In politics he was a Whig. He held various town offices and was an excellent business man, held in high esteem by all who knew him.

194 V. William Champion, born April 16, 1837. He served three years in the army, after which he travelled in the South and West and in the mining countries. He died in the summer of 1898 or 1899, at Leadville, Colorado.

195 VI. Elizabeth Caroline, born May 30, 1839; married Philander M. Hall, q.

196 VII. John Buchanan, born September 8, 1840; married Evelina A. Collins, q.

197 VIII. Mary E., born November 29, 1842 at Montezuma; teacher and milliner; lives at Mason City, Iowa; unmarried.

198 IX. Thomas Nelson, born November 9, 1845; died March 3, 1900.

199 X. Gilbert Michael, born May 26, 1847 at Montville; lives at Fort Dodge, Iowa; unmarried.

WALDON DREXLER spent his early life in Cameron Township, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania. Soon after his marriage he exchanged his farm for a larger one in Mayfield Township, securing a good bargain because the house on this new farm was said to be haunted. He and his wife received their new neighbors cordially, and the value of strange noises heard and ghosts seen, soon became old stories. He was a man of wonderful patience and even temper.

Mrs. Greenlee said she never knew him to be angry but once, and that was when a man drew a club on him while he was pitching hay in his seed house. He shortly a sense of deep indignation and passion overcame him, and he made for him with the pitchfork with all vengeance, but his money by a declaration never escaped an untimely death, for which the family was always thankful, that the name of Greenlee might be handed down untarnished and unmarked.

In 1856 he removed to Byron, Olmsted County, Minnesota, and resided in that vicinity the remainder of his life. At the age of twenty-one he united with the Baptist Church. In 1858 he severed his connection with that church, and joined the Christ Adelphians, of which society he was a most devout member. He was a close student, a fluent conversationalist and a formidable opponent in Biblical discussion. In politics he was a Whig, then Republican.

MRS. CATHARINE (LUMPTON) GREENLEE, when a child, was drowning when she was seen by a neighbor who saved her life. When she was twelve years old her father's house was burned and she had a narrow escape, but two little brothers were burned to death with their arms around each other. Her father kept the first hotel in Meadville. She grew and seen all her born before she was married. She was highly respected by all who knew her.

MARY ELEANOR GREENLEE spent the early part of her life on the old farm in Pennsylvania. She removed with her parents to Byron, Olmsted County, Minnesota. Chatfield was the nearest town of any size. At the age of sixteen she with her brother John attended an Academy taught by Professor Thomas Thickstun, his wife, brother and sister, all of Meadville, and most excellent teachers. Two years later she accompanied her brother Dr. H. B. Greenlee and his wife back to Meadville to attend school. She entered a fine school for Young Ladies kept by the Misses Crawford, and remained two years more in Minnesota. She commenced teaching at twenty years of age and taught in a number of schools among them the public schools at Chatfield and Rushford, having to resign from the latter the second year on account of poor health. After teaching a few months she bought into the millinery business in Chatfield and built up a successful business in which she continued for nine years, then sold out and went to Mason City, Iowa, where was a larger city. Here she had a flourishing trade for six years. She then sold out and spent the next three years mostly in traveling and visiting. She was much pleased with Chatfield and would have liked living there but it proved too far from home. She returned to Mason City, boarding a year and working in a millinery store, and then decided to build a home.

[illegible] VIII. Mary Lucinda, born October 20, 1869, married William Judson Grandey; married second James Lathrop Dodge, jr.

EDWIN GREENLEE was the son of one of the earliest settlers of Crawford County. After his marriage he went directly to the log cabin which he had built in the woods on his newly purchased farm in the northeast corner of Summerhill Township, Crawford County, Pennsylvania. He used several ing over into Spring Township. On this land he resided for almost seventy years. A vestige of the cellar of the old log cabin, now the site of a cider mill, is still to be seen. The furniture of the cabin was of the most primitive description, including two split-bottom chairs, a cross-legged table, four plates, two knives, two forks, two spoons, two cups and saucers, and a teapot. The fireplace was then the only means of cooking, and the baking was done in a tin oven in front of the log fire. "Tallow dips" afforded them illumination. Mr. Gremlin shopped and felled the trees, his wife helping to roll them into piles to be burned at night. When they were well settled an orchard was planted. One day while in the orchard Mrs. Gremlin looking through the fence spied a large black bear on the other side of the fence chewing his cud. She stepped up quietly and reaching her arm between the rails, grabbed the bruin by the hairs and held him until Mr. Gremlin came with an ax and killed him. It was a source of much comment and a great feast for some time.

When the farm was cleared and moved to green for purchased cows and started a dairy. The business increased and they soon had a dairy of from forty to fifty cows—then constituted a large number. Mrs. Gremlin helped in the work connected with the dairy and one season milked seventeen cows night and morning in addition to her household duties and caring for the children. Mr. Gremlin besides milking attended to the butter and cheese which he sold at the market places. He was a man of considerable inventive genius and devised and manufactured machinery for making all of his own cheese hoops and butter kegs at the time he was conducting an extensive dairy business. He invented the first machine for milking cows, which consisted of a contrivance with two air pumps and four skip-cocks, from which tubes ran to the cow's teats, the milking being accomplished by the suction from the air pumps. It worked well until the milk was partly extracted from the cow's udder, when it would collapse and the milk stop. He was unable to remedy this and the machine consequently did not prove a success, although before he learned this difficulty he was offered quite a large sum of money for the invention. In 1860, at the time that Drake first struck oil at Titusville, Mr. Gremlin adapted his machinery to the manufacture of oil barrels. We give one of his business cards on opposite page.

In the later years of his life Mr. Gremlin endeavored to construct a machine which he called the "Great American Combine" for planting and harvesting most kinds of grain, husking corn, digging potatoes, and doing different kinds of work. He built a model, but never completed it.

He was a man of very even temper, never allowing himself to become angry. It was one of his characteristics always to return good for evil. As an illustration of this trait the following incident is related:

A neighbor who lived on a farm adjoining that of Mr. Gremlin, cut the brush and briers from his side of the road, carried them across the road and threw them into Mr. Gremlin's grass for a distance of sixty to eighty rods. This was just before haying time. When it was discovered Mrs. Gremlin's idea was to make him pay damages. But Mr. Gremlin said, "I will heap coals of fire on his head." Two or three days afterward Mr. Gremlin had occasion to drive to the town of Conneaut-ville, seven miles distant. When passing the neighbor's house he saw him standing in the yard and called out, "Good morning father? I am going to town. Is there anything I can do for you?" The neighbor asked him to get a quart for his grave, and Mr. Gwinnins agreed to do so. After reaching town it changed his mind and he did not again think of the grave point until he was about half way home. He turned around and went back after it, feeling that he could not afford to miss the opportunity of doing this man a kindness. So he came back to see the neighbor, handed him the grave point and remarked, "I came very near forgetting it, and turned back when I was half way home." "Edmund," said the man, "I am very sorry you went back for that point. I don't know why you did it." "I probably would not have found inside to do at home so it is fortunately afternoon," said Mr. Gwinnins, "and I told you I would get it for you." The man's countenance brightened him and he finally said, "Edmund, I owed you a very mean trick a few days ago. I cut the brush and cedars from my side of the road and threw them over into your place somehow. I will pick them all out." And he did so, taking much more time than was spent in putting them there. The two men were ever afterward fine friends, whereas had Mr. Gwinnins acted differently they might have been enemies.

While his children were small Mr. Gwinnins was very strict with them, although very kind. Naturally the two brothers, Ralph and Robert, were always into some mischief and their father frequently had to promise them punishment. However, he would never administer the punishment at the time of the offense, probably to avoid any display of temper—but would wait until he had leisure, or until a rainy day, when he would say, "Well boys I guess we might as well settle up now," the meaning of which they well knew. After spending some time in talking to them and giving them advice, he would proceed to business matters, giving them punishments for each promise he had made them.

Edmund Gwinnins was a strong man physically and mentally. He was public spirited and progressive, was ready to assist and advance the cause of humanity, and was identified with many improvements. His industry knew no bounds. In politics, he was a Republican. He was one of the organizers of the Methodist Church in Summerhill Township, now known as the "South Church," for which he gave the land and furnished a large part of the lumber and other materials for the building.

He died at the old homestead, now owned by his sons Ralph and Robert, and his body was taken to Chicago for interment by the side of his wife in Rose Hill Cemetery.

Edmund Gwinnins was a kind husband and father and a good neighbor. He was emphatically a man of peace.

MARY WOODS FERRIER GRAFFIUS was born near Wilbraham, Massachusetts about eight miles from Springfield. Here she lived with her parents until 1831 when they moved to Hampstead, New York where her father died in 1832. After his death they moved to Lebanon, New York and later to Cleveland County Pennsylvania. Her half-brother Daniel Stickfoss came to Cleveland County first, then her brother Lemuel Stickfoss followed with their mother and the rest of the family. The household goods were brought in an ox-wagon, the family traveling most of the way on foot.

She made the most of her opportunities for obtaining an education and fitted herself to become a teacher. She taught several terms before she met and married Edmund Greenlee, receiving wheat, corn and rye in payment for her services.

At that early day farmer's wives were obliged to make the clothing of both men and women. Mrs. Greenlee was an expert at spinning and weaving. She carded and spun wool and flax and wove the same into cloth for family use. It is said that she learned to spin when so small that it was necessary for her to walk up and down an inclined board in order to reach the spindle wheel; yet in that way she was able to spin what was considered a full day's work and finish at three o'clock. She was a model housekeeper, a woman of untiring energy, but did her work intelligently and made every step count. When ever she had occasion to go into the pantry for anything she always remembered to take in something to put away, thus saving time and labor. It was her practice in early life to wash days to scrub the floor first, so that when the washing was done the house would be clean.

Mrs. Greenlee had a keen sense of right and wrong and was very zealous in the care and training of her children. She possessed a decided taste for reading and had a remarkable memory. She knew the Bible almost by heart, and could instantly tell where to find any passage in it that was quoted and rarely made a mistake. She was a woman of strong character, a true helpmate to her husband and an exemplary mother. She died while on a visit to her sons in Chicago and was buried in Rose Hill Cemetery.

255. [illegible] Frances Ellen Detarmon, born February 1, 1845, married William Bailey, r.

JOHN LAFAYETTE DETARMON was a soldier in the Civil War. He enlisted in Captain J. H. Hoover's company, 5th Virginia Infantry, serving in western Virginia. He contracted the service in the summer of 1862 and died the following year in the hospital at Cumberland, Maryland, of typhoid fever. He was a brave soldier. At a skirmish at Dover, Virginia, a bomb shell struck the back wall the company, carrying them down with dirt. It did not burst but rolled back down in front the fuse still burning. He reached out and snuffed it out as he would a candle, thus saving the lives of a number of his company.

EWING H. DETARMON proved the event in 1864 as permanent, being thus only sixteen years old. He had been serving one month when he was captured by "Mosby's Men," having the bottom shot off his cap before he was taken prisoner. He was confined in Libby prison a short time, then was taken to Andersonville, where he spent six months, suffering all the privations of that horrible prison. When he was exchanged and reached home he was a mere skeleton, and suffered all the rest of his life from the effects of his imprisonment.

[illegible] 8. Ida May Tunnicliff, born December 17, [illegible]; died August 11, [illegible].

THOMAS [illegible] TUNNICLIFF, soon after his birth, was taken to the parents to Pike, Allegheny County (now Wyoming), New York. The privileges of this new settlement were very limited and afforded little opportunity for an education, and most of his time in attended district school only three months in the year. When he was nineteen years of age he went to Pennsylvania. While leaving Pike in the spring of 1839 he cut his knee badly and not giving it proper care, after months of suffering, had his limb amputated in June. He was to have been married in August to Bethiah Greenlee, but they were not married until December. He was a poor man and a cripple, and the outlook was not very bright for a young couple to think of making a home. The day they were married he went with the minister to her father's house. He told her that if she then felt that she would rather not marry him that they would give it up, but she did not think that would be right, although her relatives had tried to persuade her against marrying him. They lived on a small farm of fifty acres and, except in winter, he followed his trade as carpenter. His wife would take him to work Monday morning and go for him Saturday afternoon, often taking her knitting with her when he would be along to drive. She managed everything, making butter and cheese, going to mill, etc. The home was always bright and cheerful, and there was always an abundance of everything for the comfort of the family. He resided in Crawford county, Pennsylvania until June, 1865. While living there he was twice elected to the office of Justice of the Peace, although he served only one term, and he was for a number of years a school director in the town of Spring. He removed to Belvidere, Illinois, which was still (1899) his home. In politics he was a Republican; in religion, Baptist.

MICHAEL GREENLEE spent his early life on his father's farm. He succeeded in getting a good common school education, and learned the trades of carpenter and shoemaker without serving an apprenticeship in either. He remained with his parents until after his marriage, when he undertook making a home of his own. He would often labor all day in the field, or at the bench, and in the evening turn the kitchen into a workshop, making shoes or shaving shingles. He was strictly temperate in his habits, never using liquors nor tobacco in any form. He was possessed of an even temper and a happy disposition, which made him a model husband and father.

JOHN CHAMBERLIN GREENLEE passed most of his life in southeastern Ohio. He enlisted in Company E, 29th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, September 18, 1861, for three years. He was in the battle of Winchester, Fort Republic, Cedar Mountain, Chancellorsville, and Missionary Ridge, being wounded at Chancellorsville. He was discharged at Atlanta, Georgia, October 18, 1864, by reason of expiration of term of service.

DELBERT E. GREENLEE spent his early days on a farm. He attended the country school until 1888, when he was granted a teacher's certificate and taught school for two months. After this he attended high school at Kingsville, Ohio, for a term or two, and in 1897 entered Hillsdale (Michigan) College. Since then his time and energy have been divided between carrying a living and wrestling with an eight year course of schooling, having the necessity to show

FRITZ ELDON WIARD GREENLEE spent his youthful days on his father's farm near Kingsville, Ohio, going to district schools, except one winter spent at Springfield, Pennsylvania. Just at the close of the Civil War he went West, stopping at Bancroft, Missouri, where he was threatened with a rope by the soldiers of Bushwhackers, it being a rebel rebel town at that time. He left there and went to Sandoval, Illinois, where he remained one year. Then returned to Ohio. He engaged in farming, and also carried the mail from Jefferson, Ohio, to Lenoxville, Pennsylvania, until 1878. Then moved to Michigan, where he spent three years dwelling up a farm. The great forest fire of 1881 caused him the loss of a half crop of hops. He returned to Clarendon, Michigan, and accepted a position in forest for a New York firm, remaining three eleven years. In 1888 he lost his dwelling and a large stock building by fire. He returned in 1892 but moved back to Jackson, where he has since been engaged in the propagation of small fruit.

[illegible] 2. Milo Clark, born April 15, 1848, at Erie; married Nellie Dunnar at Salt Lake City, Utah.

[illegible] (1.1.8) was born in Dec., 1818, the following November his parents moved from Greenwich to Salem, Wayne County, New York and in 1822 they moved to Pittsford, near Rochester. He was the eldest of eight children. He received a common school education, his father, who was well educated, giving him much assistance at home. His father, who was of Scotch-Irish descent, descendant of a Huguenot family, was a blacksmith and a very good man. His mother, who was also from New Hampshire, Massachusetts, was of English descent. His paternal grandfather served in the militia during the Revolutionary War. Genealogy [illegible] as Ensign, 1772, was his grandfather's to mention.

In 1833 the family moved to Gorham, Wayne County, Michigan, where Elias worked for a farmer, Aaron Thomas. He found the work very heavy but kept at it for six months. Mr. Thomas then offered him, if he would consider he work for him a year, a soldier's right to eighty acres of swamp land lying below the Locks of Chicago south, valued at one hundred and forty dollars. He wished to accept, but his father said it was good for nothing and never would be. He worked mostly at farming until he was about twenty years old when he went to school for three months to prepare himself for teaching. He taught successfully winters, following the lake summers as a hand on freight boats for about four years, when he was attacked with malarial fever which incapacitated him for any kind of work for a year. He went to Monastown, Pennsylvania, for his health which improved and he opened a small country store and started an factory for the manufacturing of pearl ashes and saleratus which he conducted at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

He and Lorena Stebbins were married at her parents home by Squire Thomas at twelve o'clock noon. After the ceremony a turkey dinner was served to the guests. That evening he moved his bride's belongings in a wheelbarrow to their new home, which consisted of three rooms adjoining his store, and set up housekeeping. They were both fond of social pleasures and were prominent in the dancing parties given. In the autumn of 1855 he moved to Albion, Erie County, where he continued his business successfully. In April, 1856, he moved to Erie where he engaged in manufacturing saleratus, while continuing his store at Albion which was conducted mostly by his brother-in-law, A. B. Case, who was a partner in the business. In the spring of 1861 they moved their merchandise to Corry, there in the business continued. Two and a half years later by the mutual partnership with A. B. Case and moved his stock to Erie, continuing into partnership with Warren A. Smith, at that time one of the best dry goods men in that part of the country. They conducted a leading dry goods business at Erie for six years. Then moved their stock to Titusville. About a year later, April, 1868, Mr. Clark moved his family to Titusville, and about that time bought the McGuire farm on Oswayo Run and began operating in oil. Oil was $6.25 a barrel when he came to Titusville and two years after bought farm and large Indiana a barrel. In 1872 he sold his interest in the store and, moving to Erie, retired from active business. In June, 1874, he made a trip to Colorado and invested in mines, and moved his family to Denver in the autumn of the same year. His mining investments were unsuccessful, and in 1876 he had to begin over again. In February, 1877, he went to Pueblo to stick an oil well, having the previous year prospected around Canyon City without success. On the first day of January, 1880, he struck artesian mineral water, which proved to be highly impregnated with minerals of curative properties. The summer following he erected a small rough bath house from which the present commodious house and large business have grown. In the autumn of 1890 he sold one-half interest in the Mineral spring and baths, but still attended to his business affairs. He considered the discovery of this mineral spring the greatest achievement of his life.

DAVID ELAND GREENLEE assisted his father on the farm until he was twenty-one years of age, receiving in the meantime a common school and academic education. When he was twenty-one he received a new suit of clothes and a suit valued at one hundred dollars. He entered upon the sea of life with a limited knowledge of the world. It was his desire to study medicine, but the opportunity did not present itself at that time, so he decided on the study of dentistry as the next best thing, hoping then to secure means to give a medical education. During the autumn of 1876 he entered the office of Drs. Robbins and Taylor, then resident dentists of Meadville, Pennsylvania, giving his only in exchange for instruction in the profession. These years were spent in studying Anatomy, Physiology, Chemistry and prosthetic dentistry. At the end of that time he opened an office in Meadville. Prosperity favored the young dentist, and he continued the study of medicine under the tutelage of Dr. H. K. Bell of Meadville. In 1880 a course of medical lectures were taken at Ann Arbor. In 1882 he commenced the practice of medicine and surgery with his prescription, both being employed by the Pittsburgh and Boston Mining Company at Eagle River, Lake Superior, Michigan. In 1884 he enlisted in the army and received a commission as Assistant Surgeon of the 17th Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, and served until the close of the war. During the years 1886-1887 he graduated in medicine and surgery from the University of Pennsylvania, and at the same time received a diploma from the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgeons. His practice was limited to medicine and surgery, and he continued at Meadville and vicinity until 1892, when he moved to Fergus Falls, Minnesota, and from there to St. Paul. In 1901 he received an appointment to the Minnesota Soldier's Home, at Fergus. He has served as a member of the Board of Pension examiners both in Pennsylvania and Minnesota, and occupied many other positions of trust. In 1887 he took a post graduate course at Rush Medical College, Chicago. He joined the Masonic society and the Odd Fellows in the early fifties. In 1878 he was Grand Regent of the Royal Arcanum for the state

The sketch of the life of Mrs. Emily Brooks Doerner, see Brooks Ancestors. [Appendix A.]

ISABELLA VINCENT DOERNER attended the public schools of Chicago up to the age of fifteen years, with the exception of annual months spent in travelling with the family in Europe and the United. She spent her tenth birthday in Bethlehem, and was the first American little girl to go through Prince Hall. In 1897 she entered the Spencer School for Young Ladies, near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. In 1899 she went with the family on a trip around the world, which occupied fourteen months. She was a sensitive, retiring child, though enjoying social when her health permitted. She was much interested in children and spent about a year in the Chicago Kindergarten College. Not seem very strong, the work proved too hard for her and she gave it up. She married music with Mr. Lehring of Chicago, having given lessons from him.

though she never was more than a home performer on that instrument. She also played the mandolin. She died after a short illness, June 18, 1902.

RALPH STERRINS GREENLEE [illegible]

son of Edmund Greenlee and Mary Wright Robbins was born April 13, 1868, at Kendall, Crawford Co., Pennsylvania; married February 13, 1888, at Chicago, Illinois, ELIZABETH BROOKS, born August 14, 1870, at Shortsville, Canada, daughter of William Brooks and Emily Abbott.

CHILDREN:

[illegible] 1. [illegible], born December 26, 1889; married James Alan Lounsbury; a [illegible] in politics he is a Republican. Residence, Forest Park, Chicago.

ROBERT LEWIS GREENLEE and RALPH STERRINS GREENLEE began at the age of ten to assist in the active duties of farm life by carrying the milk from the yard into the cheese house, in that way helping their mother with her milking. At the age of twelve each of them milked ten cows night and morning, and became very expert milkers. A year or two afterward they learned to make the cheese and butter, and were able to attend to that while their father was engaged in other duties on the farm. After their father had invented a machine for the manufacture of his cheese boxes and butter firkins, the boys helped him in that department, thus learning the cooper's trade. Robert Lewis was left-handed and Ralph Sterrins Greenlee, right-handed. They chopped as one man and did their other work in the same manner.

They were given the best educational advantages the common schools afforded, and later attended Allegheny College at Meadville, Pennsylvania, although neither of them completed the college course.

While working for their father their mechanical skill was developed. They became acquainted with Mr. Drake, the first discoverer of oil, and furnished him with barrels. They also manufactured oil barrels for Oil Creek, but this did not prove a successful venture as the price of barrels became very low, and the flow of oil was so great that it became of little value. When they could not sell their barrels they bought oil at twenty-five cents a barrel; but the difficulties were so great in getting it from the field that they lost money on it. At that time Oil Creek was practically a wilderness, except here and there a clearing with a small farm house. They were well acquainted with "Coal Oil Johnny" and at one time stopped one night at the home of his fatherinlaw, "Widow McClintock."

They purchased their father's patents for keg and barrel machinery, giving him their notes for six thousand dollars in payment, and went into the business of manufacturing cooperage. They met with so much success that they were able to meet the notes at the end of the first year.

In 1887 the brothers decided to go to Chicago and continue the manufacture of cooperage on a larger scale, having their machinery constructed in Erie, Pennsylvania. They made a contract with Samuel M. Nickerson & Company for the manufacture of barrels for the business which was then using one hundred and sixty barrels per day. They were expected opposition from the coopers, and were just proud of the patronage of a Cooper's Union—probably the first union ever established in Chicago. It was soon decided by the Union that it was not to their interest to allow the Greenlee machinery to run. At that time some hoop-machines sold for high prices, and they were not prepared with machinery for the splitting, turning, and setting of hickory hoops, as the oil barrels which they had made in Pennsylvania were hooped with iron, for which they had the machinery. Consequently it was necessary for them to employ coopers to do that work. It was out of the rules of the Union that no one but a cooper's son should be allowed to learn the trade. The Union decided that the only way to drive out the machinery was to hook only as many barrels as they could have made by hand, as it would cost just as much for merely hooping a barrel as it would to shave the staves and heading by hand, point them, trim them, and finish the barrel. In this way the Greenlees would receive practically nothing for the work done by the machinery. That was true, but the company should make the barrels well if possible, either by putting hickory strips across the joints under the hoops, or by cutting holes in the joints from the inside. It finally became necessary to discharge all the union coopers and hire green men from the shops, whom they were able to teach to split, shave and hoop a barrel. In time they became independent and as a result practically broke up the union, although it required a great deal of money, perseverance, and courage. They were at their place of business from five and six in the morning until eight or nine at night, in that way preparing the material for work the following day. They made a success of the company's business, and finally organized a company which was known as the "United States Barrel Machine Company" and sold our their patents.

In 1864 they became members of the Board of Trade, and remained members for three or four years. They did not meet with success and decided that they were not adapted for a speculative business. At that time the Board of Trade was located on South Water Street, and the membership fee was twenty-five dollars.

In 1866 they formed a co-partnership with their father-in-law, Mr. William Brooks, and under the firm name of Greenlee Brothers & Company, entered business for the general sale of machinery and railway and mechanics supplies, in addition to carpetage, which they carried on successfully for a few years. They then purchased Mr. Brooks' interest and engaged in the manufacture of special lines of wood-working machinery for the carpenters of wood, frame and bridge, and special machinery for railroad car building. They were the first to adopt and build a machine of mortising timber by the use of the hollow chisel, or, as it was called, boring a square hole. They were also the first to introduce a number of patents on machinery for use in that connection and other special wood-working machinery. They have been constantly adding new inventions and methods until the Greenlee machines have become famous with manufacturers in wood all over the world. Immediately after the great fire in 1871 they removed to their premises on West Twelfth street.

In 1887, in connection with the wood-working machinery business they engaged in the manufacture of repairs for all makes and ranges, which has grown to such an extent that they now have patterns for the housing and power of over one hundred and fifty thousand different screws and rangers, being the largest concern of the kind in the world. These tools extends practically over the whole country. The same year they built a foundry for the manufacture of castings for their wood-working machinery and stove repairs.

In 1886 the firm of Greenlee Brothers & Company was incorporated, and they also incorporated the Northwestern Stove Repair Company, which employs 40 to 50 men, and the Greenlee Foundry Company, which employs 200 men, and in this way were enabled to divide their personal property. They have since added to the manufacture of wood-working machinery, the manufacture of auger bits of every description.

In 1902 Greenlee Brothers & Company moved their plant to Rockford, Illinois. The factory site comprises twenty-two acres of ground, the present buildings covering about eleven acres. They manufacture wood-working machinery, particularly for car shops, mortising, boring, carving and tenoning machinery, wood boring tools, square augers, etc. The buildings are mostly fire-proof and are all steel construction. There are two machine shops, a one-story building, 300 x 205 feet, the other also a one-story building, the forge shop, 50 x 150 feet, the tool department, a two-story building, 50 x 200 feet, engine house, 50 x 65 feet, pattern building, 75 x 150 feet, two storage buildings, 50 x 150 feet each, a forge shop, 60 x 300 feet and a foundry 75 x 180 feet. They contemplate erecting a tool building and auger bit department, 100 x 200 feet. They give employment to about four hundred men.

When they came to Chicago they had very little money but have never received any financial assistance. They have always been in business together, their interests being equal, and their success can be attributed to their perfect confidence in each other and their unity of action. If one is away the other acts independently, each having full power of attorney from the other, to do anything necessary with their property, both personal and real.

Some years after their removal to Chicago they bought the old homestead in Crawford County, which contains the home of the Greenlee family in Pennsylvania. They married sisters (both of whom were twins, but not of the same pair), daughters of William Brooks who for many years was a resident of Shortsville, Canada, and one of the leading spirits of the constitutional government of the Dominion, but later became a resident of Chicago.

In 1904 they published "The Greenlee Genealogy" in two large volumes, printed on fine antique hand made paper, and substantially bound in half morocco. They endeavored to combine all the good qualities in the many hundreds of genealogies in the Newberry Library, one of the main points being to make it so plain that a child could understand and easily trace his ancestry. The result is summed up in the following reviews from the two most noted genealogical magazines in the United States.

[illegible] genealogical details, and an unusually specific index. Much attention has been bestowed on the Dennis line, as also on persons intermarrying with the Hutchins family, particular pains having been devoted to the Hutchins-Dorr-Dell intermarriages. The reproduction comprises military services, Hutchins authors and other matters of importance. The reproduction of many of Hutchins documents and bookmarks in wives is specially worthy of note. There are over two hundred illustrations, chiefly portraits.—[From the New England Historical and Genealogical Register.]

The Hutchins Genealogy. Ralph Hutchins Gowdey and Robert Leonard Gowdey. In two volumes. Chicago: Privately printed. 1898. Folio, half morocco, pp. 1200.

These two volumes, imposing in appearance, and more comprehensive in scope than not an insulin which glorifies the name of the experienced student, and will be found by most helpful to those members of the Hutchins family who are fortunate enough to secure copies of the work. No pains or expense have been spared to make this history the most complete of its kind. In attempting to discover the English birthplace of Rowland Hutchins the American progenitor, research was had to Domesday Book, and photographs were made of it and the chest in which it is kept, and facsimiles made of portions of the original text, accompanied by translations of it. The biography of Rowland Hutchins is very full, and in this as in all the early generations the compilers have given marginal references for each vital statement. Capitals are used for the name of the Hutchins descendants and their bookmarks or wives, and the head of each family is given in heavy-faced type, thus greatly assisting the eye. A very unusual, if not original feature is that following the name of the head of a branch, beside the brief tracing back by generations to the Hutchins, each successive bearing his generation and family number, the wife of each bookmark is given towards her husband's name, enabling one to get the line at a glance. The compilers have been most successful in discovering the place and date of birth, marriage and death, as well as a good deal of general information. The records of military service in the second volume are particularly valuable, because proper references are given for all of them, a feature seldom observed in a family history. After noting as much excellence, it is most satisfactory to find the labor completing this beautiful piece of workmanship as thoroughly as to serve the purpose. In this index the name of the Hutchins descendant is followed by the name of his parents and his generation and page number. The volumes are liberally illustrated and altogether reflect great credit upon those concerned in their production.—[From the New York Genealogical and Biographical Record.]

As will be seen by their photographs, the brothers very closely resemble each other, and they are as much alike in character, disposition and thought, as in looks. They have always taken a lively interest in the welfare of the city, and both are members of the Union League Club. They have been extensive travelers, and with their family—who always accompany them, have visited most of the foreign countries, making trips around the world, and going into the interior of China, Japan, and other oriental countries. Their leading characteristics are inbred politeness, kindness and consideration for others, coupled with indomitable will-power, untiring energy, broad liberality and uncompromising honesty. Their fortunes have been fairly gained, and stand proud monuments to their sturdy manhood and genius.

[illegible] II. Elizabeth May, born July 2 [illegible], married Charles Wiseman Woodhead, q.v.

MARY LOUISA GREENLEE was an unusually bright child, and learned her A.B.C's when but four years old. From that time on she attended school at Edinboro, and there finished the days of her school life. A little hoodlum, utterly illegitimate but bold and determined character when but a child, accosted one day when her parents had left her home alone while they drove to town, if Mr. Cyre had been with them that day working about the house and Mary Louisa, then but four years old, thought that he ought to have his supper. She went out and asked him to get some provisions for her, as she could not reach them, and told him she would cook them for him if he would. He got them and she cooked them and she fried some meat, set the table as well as she could by being very little she could set on the dishes on and had to push them on from the edge. He then enjoyed his meal and was very much pleased and amused with his little hostess. It was very hard work for her, and after the little lad finished she asked him if he would cook her to sleep, which he did.

After her marriage with William Dellas Greenlee, they lived at Wilkes, Erie County, Pennsylvania. They moved from Wilkes to Chicago two years before the Chicago fire, and resided on the west side.

HARVEY UNDERWOOD GREENLEE spent three years, 1862 to 1865 in Pennsylvania of fighting. On August 16, 1862 he enlisted in Company A under Colonel James Irwin Gregg, and joined the army of the Potomac. He was at Chancellorville, Beverly Station, Mine Run, Wilderness, in the Richmond Raid, Cold Harbor, and other important engagements, until the fight at Deep Bottom, where he received a certain wound in the shoulder. Four months later he joined his regiment at Light House Point and was in action at Fort Fisher and Appomattox. On June 16, 1865 he was honorably discharged at Lynchburg, Virginia.

At the close of the war Mr. Greenlee went directly to Bedford, Iowa, without capital or education, with only willing hands and a determination to make something of himself. At first he worked as a common laborer, but he was not satisfied with a menial position and was long engaged in business for himself. He purchased a stone quarry within the city limits, opened it, and began laying foundations for buildings. He soon added the manufacture of lime to his business. He gradually worked up an income large for a realm of money miles beyond his very dreams. His whole career has been characterized by honorable and upright dealing, which is the secret of his success. In politics he is a Republican; in religion, Baptist.

CLARENCE JESSE HUNTER moved with his father and step-mother to a farm near Calumetville, Michigan. He left home at the age of fifteen and stayed with his sister in Wisconsin until he was of age, then went to St. Paul, Minnesota and enlisted in the United States Army, cavalry, September 12, 1889, being stationed at Fort Magginnis, Montana. He has been stationed at different times in the forts at Yellowstone, Wyoming; Custer, Montana; Myer, Virginia; Stanton, New Mexico and Fort Snelling, Minnesota. He participated in the Sioux campaign in the winter of 1890-1891, when Sitting Bull was captured, and was in the Spanish-American war, actively engaged in the battle of El Caney, and the different engagements the day following until the surrender. After the surrender he was taken ill with malarial fever and for two days his life was despaired of. The fever settled in his legs so he could not walk, and when his regiment returned to the States he was sent to St. John's Hospital,

Brooklyn, New York for treatment, and remained there thirty-four days. After his return he resided in Port Sandusky, and in the fall of 1899 was in the campaign against the Indians of Lake Lake, where Major Wilkinson and others were killed. He was promoted a non-commissioned officer for bravery and took three joining the army he has engineered the space time and is now a first class steam engineer and has studied electricity.

MARY L. TURNBAUGH[4] [illegible] daughter of Delilah Gressler and Thomas Shackford Turnbaugh, was born July 21, 1853 at Springboro, Crawford Co., Pennsylvania, married October 28, 1880 at Belvidere, Illinois, DWIGHT H. BAKER, born April 18, 1852 at Barnstead, Quebec, Canada, son of Prentice Monroe Baker and Mary B. Stephens.

CHILDREN:

624 I. Ralph Prentice Baker, born June 13, 1882.
625 II. Ruth Turnbaugh Baker, born December 5, 1886.

DWIGHT H. BAKER remained with his parents in Canada until he was eight years old, when they moved to a farm in Iowa County, Wisconsin. He remained with them until he was twenty-three years of age, and during these years of his life at home he managed to learn the trade of mason. Hearing that Iowa was one of the best states in the Union, he resolved to go west and see for himself. Texas County seemed to improve his native favorably and he located at Tyler in the spring of 1891, and went to work at his trade. He was kept continually busy from the time the frost was out of the ground until it was frozen again in the fall, always having a large crew of men with him. But after eight years of this hard labor he became convinced that there were easier ways of making a living than by pounding irons and sledging nailed and so resolved to go into the barber business. In the fall of 1899 he bought the barber shop formerly owned by L. C. Osborne and is still doing business at the same stand. His shop is fitted with an complete a record of barber as can be found in many towns twice his size of Tyler, and is equipped with a large barber shop and office. He has the bill receipts connected with the office so that he has communication with all the towns of our war throughout the state. He is a very successful barber and allows his line of his N. C. R. R. R., thus affording the best facilities for the receipt and sale of the stock market, which embraces horses and domestic barber lots, shingles, sash, doors, blinds, sash-weights, and all kinds of building material such as stone, brick, lime, cement and Atlantic plaster—the best in the market. Mr. Parker is also a member in the art of plastering and in 1899 built one of the finest residences that there is in the city. In 1900 he opened a barber shop at Dunkirk and is still running it, also one in his own town of Cabin. In politics he is a Republican, in religion, Congregationalist.

MICHAEL DAVID GREENLEE [illegible]

son of Michael Greenlee and Rebecca Howard Greenlee, was born October 19, 1835 near Uniontown, Bedford County, Pennsylvania; died February 28, or March 7, 1904 at Lawrence, Kansas; married May 27, 1874, at Chicago, Illinois, ELIZA A. STUTZ, born July 26, 1853 at St. Louis, Missouri, daughter of Francis J. Stutz; married second January 1, 1902, ROSE DATE BLACK of Lawrence.

CHILDREN:

836 I. Thad E., born March 14, 1875; died July 24, 1878.
837 II. Effie May, born August 14, 1877; died July 28, 1878.
838 III. Edith E., born January 22, 1880.

MICHAEL DAVID GREENLEE whose father died before his birth, lived with his mother's people in another neighborhood, attending school and working on a farmer to support his children. After his second marriage, he found a home with his mother and stepfather, until 1867, when his mother was again left a widow with four small children. Coming just after the close of the war, the unsettled conditions of business offers demanded immediate attention if a home was to be saved for the mother and children. In order to do this he had to sacrifice his long cherished hope of attending the State Normal School, for which he had saved and struggled for the past two or three years. About five years later, the home being secured and the oldest child quite a lad, Michael started for the free climate of eastern Kansas. On January 1, 1872, when the first passenger train passed over the track of what was then a branch of the Missouri Pacific Railroad (now part of the Santa Fe System), he went into the office as clerk and general roustabout, working for his board and clothing, and applying his spare moments to study. In November 1872, the station agent resigned and he received the appointment as agent. In 1878 when the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe leased the right of way and joint use of the tracks he became their agent also, and at the same time became agent for the Wells Fargo Express Company, and Western Union Telegraph operator. In July, 1877 he was forced to seek the mountain breezes of Colorado and in November following returned to Pennsylvania, on what he supposed was his last visit to his mother. After several weeks he was able to return to his Kansas home, but continued ill health compelled him to resign his position with the railroad. Three days later he was asked by a board of directors to take charge of and close up the affairs of a co-operative store, which he did. In November, 1878, he became bookkeeper and assistant postmaster for Mr. Charles Fills, the leading merchant of the place. After about six years of service with Mr. Fills, he resigned to accept the position of Deputy County Clerk of Douglas County, Kansas, and in 1884 removed his family to Lawrence. After serving two terms of two years each as Deputy, he was nominated and elected as County Clerk, on the Republican ticket. After two years of incumbency in this office, on account of his refusal to yield to the dictatorship of party bosses in what he believed to be against the interest of his constituents, he was defeated in the convention for renomination. He yielded to the voice of friends and entered the race as an independent candidate, and he was elected by nearly a thousand majority. At the expiration of his second term, feeling that he had been vindicated, he retired from politics for good. After this he went to work for the Fraternal Aid Association. He was engaged in field work when a vacancy occurred in the general secretary's office and he was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy. He was General Secretary of this association for five years and under his administration the association made a great growth. He held that position until July, 1909, when he became engaged in general insurance work. He was considered one of the finest accountants in the state.

Mr. Crossley was a man of strong character, forceful and able. He was a lifelong member of the Baptist church and took an active part in church work. Where in politics he was always vigorous. His helpful work brought him into prominence all over the country. In business he was honest and capable, and his motto: He was sure to make and hold friends. His home was at Lawrence, Kansas.

[illegible] 2. Francis Lowell Dunn, born March 26, 1898.
[illegible] 3. Gertrude Swanson Dunn, born December 19, 1899.

[illegible] JOHN began his common school education at the age of seven in the little Dunn schoolhouse on the foot of the hill immediately south of Dunn's Corners. At the age of fifteen, on account of the impaired health of his father, almost the entire charge of the farm and market garden devolved upon him. In the winter following his father's death, he taught a four months' term in the Castle school. During the winter the farm was sold and disposition was made of the personal property preparatory to moving to Mendville, for the purpose of entering Allegheny College, where he supported a course with hard work and self sacrifice, and he went he realized what pursuit with nutrition and low finances. After his graduation in 1896, he became principal of the Greenville school, with three assistant teachers, and was re-elected for the same position the year following, but resigned to take advantage of a scholarship in the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, which had been won by competitive examination. After the University closed he taught a short term of school at Kirkland, near West Chester. The next year the principal of the State Normal School at West Chester induced him to accept the chair of Latin in that institution for the following year. During the winter many medical cases were observed with his brother, Dr. Thomas H. Dunn, who practiced in West Chester, and much experience gained. He continued his University course thereafter without interruption until his graduation in 1901. Soon after graduation he secured a position as assistant surgeon at the State Hospital for injured miners at Hazelton, Pennsylvania. Five years medical experience nearly acquired by the house graduate, because he as officer of a mine hospital, whenever the superintendent was away, the resident took sole on his own responsibility. After resigning from this position he became a special course with regard to the eye. A little later he practiced in the coal region near Hazelton. After having there nearly a year was spent as assistant physician at the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg. After this he spent considerable time at the Polyclinic in Philadelphia, studying the eye, ear, nose and throat. Thereafter he settled in western Pennsylvania—in Meadville for a few months, and afterward at Erie where he has since devoted himself with some success to the special treatment of the eye, ear, nose and throat.

JESSE DICKINSON SEARLES removed with his parents to Wisconsin in 1868. His father bought fifteen hundred acres of land, and kept three thousand sheep, and shipped the first consignment of wool from the port of Sparta to New York City. He assisted and kept his father's books and between the books and the farm, he had opportunity to develop strength and to learn the value of time and labor. At the age of fifteen he taught his first school. When he was in his seventeenth year, he and his brother, Daniel, started for the newly discovered gold fields of California. They journeyed across the plains with an ox team, leaving home March 5, 1849, and arrived at the Rancherias in the Sacramento Valley on September 25, having been over six months en route. They went into the gold fields of the Kilkenny on the Yuba River above where Marysville was afterward built, and there lived and labored. The outcome was some gold and much that could not be purchased with gold, namely, improved health and a knowledge of the country and of men. Returning home they took ship at San Francisco and landed at Acapulco in Mexico, thence across the country on horseback, through the City of Mexico to Vera Cruz—a journey of eight hundred miles. From Vera Cruz they crossed the Gulf, then up the Mississippi River, arriving at home April 6, 1852. The lads attended Beloit College, and afterward engaged in teaching for several years. In April, 1858, he united with the West Wisconsin Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and has been preaching since. He received his forty-fourth annual appointment from his conference, commencing on the effective list, sixteen years of which was as presiding elder, and three years at Deadwood, North Dakota, as Superintendent of the Black Hills Mission. He is now justice of the First Methodist Episcopal Church in Superior, Wisconsin. In politics, he is a Republican.

HARRY LE FEVRE GREENLEE removed with his parents to Ravenna, Ohio, when about three years old, then to Union City, and back to Meadville, when he was ten years old. When he was seventeen his parents moved to Fergus Falls, Minnesota, and there he entered a printing office. After working there four years, he spent three years in college, expecting to study medicine. He gave up this idea and entered the dental office of his brother, where he worked part of the time for seven or eight years. In the meantime his father had removed to St. Paul, where he went and worked in the Northern Pacific Railroad office for six months. For three years he was a member of Company C, Third Regiment of State Militia, from which he received an honorable discharge. He removed to the northern part of the state, where he surveyed lands and took up a pine timber claim, and while holding it for four years he worked at his trade or whatever he could find to do. In the meantime his fellow called him to act as usher at the Soldiers' Home at Minneapolis. After two months in that capacity he was promoted to head usher, and as such continued for two years. He then bought a farm and summer resort on which he now resides. In politics, he is a Republican; in religion, Christian.

GRACE EMILY GREENLEE[illegible] (Daniel Lamont Greenlee[illegible] Emily Brooks) (Edward Livingston[illegible] Mary Wright Hamilton) (William Greenlee[illegible] Rachael Brooks) (William Greenlee[illegible])

daughter of Robert Lamont Greenlee and Emily Brooks, was born October 2, 1869 at Chicago, Illinois; married September 26, 1903 at Chicago, CHARLES MORFORD DRACKENDORF, born November 3, 1867 at Canton, Ohio, son of Charles J. Drackendorf and Elizabeth Hurford. No Children.

GRACE EMILY GREENLEE attended the public schools of Chicago until she was fifteen, when she entered Ferry Hall Seminary at Lake Forest, Illinois. In the Spring of 1886 she went with the family for an extended trip abroad, lasting sixteen months. On her return she spent two years more at Lake Forest, and then attended the Ogontz School for Young Ladies, at Philadelphia, spending two years in study there. In 1891 the family took another trip abroad, spending a year travelling around the world. During this time letters were regularly to a friend at home, making a complete diary of the trip in this way. A few years after her return, at the request of the family, these letters were published in a limited edition of two hundred copies, being printed for private distribution only. The title of the book was "As we were journeying". It was profusely illustrated with half tones made mostly from photographs taken by her brother, William Brooks Greenlee, and made an interesting souvenir of the trip.

CHARLES MORFORD DRACKENDORF attended public school at Canton, Ohio, Terre Haute and Indianapolis, Indiana, Jersey City, New Jersey, and Chicago. He came to Chicago in 1882, where he has since resided. At the age of fifteen he went to work in the mail office of A. J. Drackendorf & Company; was cashier for J. L. Hathaway Coal Company; clerk for Ure & Lockett, also American Short Ship Investors Association; clerk Superintendent for Peabody Coal Company; Paymaster for Ajax Forge Company and Grafin Wheel Company; traveling salesman for Peabody Coal Company, also Silver Creek & Buena Coal Company. He spent the winter of 1901 in Europe. He was general salesman and credit man for H. L. Bodstrom & Company and continued with them thirteen years. At the present time he is with the Swenson Foundry Company. In politics he is a Republican.

WILLIAM BROOKS GREENLEE [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] son of Robert Leonard Greenlee and Emily Brooks, was born April 22, 1872 at Chicago, Illinois; married January 18, 1905 at Chicago, ADELINE DENIAM PARSONS, born September 8, 1872 at Chicago, daughter of Samuel Weekes Fargo and Mary Clark.

CHILDREN:

[illegible] 1. Robert Fargo, born February 10, 1906 at Chicago.
[illegible] 2. Dorothy, born October 28, [illegible].

WILLIAM BROOKS GREENLEE received his early education in Chicago. He took a two years' course in the business department of Beloit College (Wisconsin) College, 1888-90, and graduated from Cornell University at Ithaca, New York, in 1896 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. He accompanied his father and family on a tour of Europe which extended over a period of seven months. In 1902 he went to Europe, spending the summer in Germany. In 1904-05, with his sister members of the family, took a trip around the world. In 1906 he went to South America, visiting Brazil and Argentine Republic, crossing the Andes in 1906, returning by the west coast to Panama, with a side trip to Guam, the old Spanish capital. In 1908 he assumed the firm of Swenson Brothers & Company as secretary, and is now (1907) president of that company and secretary of the Northwestern Steam Repair Company and Swenson Foundry Company.

ARTHUR HARRIS [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] daughter of Ralph Swenson Greenlee and Elizabeth Brooks, was born December 28, 1902 at Chicago, Illinois; married September 28, 1922 at Chicago, LEWIS ALLEN LOCKWOOD, born June 6, 1897 at Winchendon, Hartford Co., Connecticut, son of Charles Lounsbury and Isabella Spaulding.

CHILDREN:

[illegible] 1. Ralph Swenson Lounsbury, born January 30, 1926.
[illegible] 2. Elizabeth Lounsbury, born May 3, 1930.

GERTRUDE GREENLEE attended the public schools of Chicago until her fourteenth year, when she entered Lake Forest Seminary at Lake Forest, Illinois. Her studies there were interrupted to some extent by a trip to Europe in 1890, and one to Mexico. On this account she did not graduate with the class she originally entered, but with the class of 1900. In June, 1900, immediately after her graduation, she started with her parents on a journey around the world, spending considerable time in Japan, China, India, Egypt and Palestine, returning to Chicago in November, 1901. After her marriage she continued to reside in Chicago.

JAMES ALLEN LOCHSHEET, eldest son of Cooke and Isabella (Spaulding) Lounsbury, was born in 1867 at Wethersfield, Connecticut. Early in 1868 the family removed from Wethersfield to Meriden, Connecticut, where they lived until 1876, when they removed to Hartford. He was educated in the public schools of Hartford. In September, 1887, he entered the employ of the Westinghouse Electric Company of Hartford. In 1889 this company was bought out by the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Mr. Lounsbury was retained by the Westinghouse Company, and remained with them several years as traveling engineer, with headquarters first at Pittsburgh, and later (1893) at Chicago. He left the Westinghouse Company in May, 1892, to take the position of Engineer in charge of Incandescent Lighting at the World's Columbian Exposition held in Chicago in 1893, and was connected with the Exposition until January 1, 1894. He was engaged in the manufacture of electrical apparatus, as president of the Lounsbury Manufacturing Company at Chicago, until 1897, when the plant and business were entirely destroyed by fire. In 1901 he entered the employ of Goodwin Brothers & Company, manufacturers of woodworking machinery, and in 1908 was elected Vice President of that company, which office he still holds.
